1 MR. HIMMEL: If we could get started,
2 please?

3 Good morning. I'm Michael Himmel and 4 I'm the President of the Association of the Federal 5 Bar. On behalf of the officers, trustees and 6 members of the Association, I'd like to welcome each 7 of you to the 23rd Annual U.S. Judicial Conference.

8 A number of months ago the Association 9 decided that it was going to have two panels for the 10 program today. One on employment law and one on 11 media coverage of high-profile trials.

12 For me the job was easy. I turned to 13 Rosemary Alito, one of the most outstanding 14 employment lawyers in the state, and to Joe Hayden, 15 one of the most outstanding trial lawyers in the 16 state and a veteran of high-profile cases.

17 Both of them stepped up to the plate 18 and knocked the ball out of the park in putting 19 today together two extraordinary panels. And it is 20 evidenced by the fact that today we have the largest 21 attendance ever at a Judicial Conference of over 400 22 attendees.

23 Thank you, Rosemary and Joe, for all of 24 your hard work.

25 (Applause.)

1 MR. HIMMEL: And as all of you know, we 2 are fortunate to have two-time Pulitzer Prize winner
3 Anthony Lewis as our luncheon speaker. As a result 4 of this extraordinary program today, there will not 5 be any formal coffee break. However, all of you 6 may, if you wish, seek coffee in the side room.

7 I'd also like to take this opportunity
8 to thank my Executive Director, Ginny Whipple, for 9 all the work in putting together today's program as 10 well.

11 (Applause.)

12 MR. HIMMEL: At this time I'd ask our 13 distinguished Chief Judge, Anne Thompson, to come up 14 to the podium and make a few welcoming remarks of 15 her own. Thank you.

16 Judge Thompson.

17 (Applause.)

18 JUDGE THOMPSON: Thank you, Mr. Himmel.
19 Members of the Association of the 20 Federal Bar, members of the judiciary and guests.
21 In 1993 this organization presented the William J.
22 Brennan, Jr., Award to the Honorable A. Leon 23 Higginbotham, former Chief Judge of the Third 24 Circuit Court of Appeals.

25 The sudden death of former Chief Judge

1 Higginbotham on December 14th of last year is an 2 event worthy of note at this occasion. Judge
3 Higginbotham was a large man with an impressive 4 physical presence as well as a booming commanding
5 voice. He was gifted with a quick mind, ready wit, 6 unfailing eloquence and an ingratiating charm. Many 7 of us have very personal treasured memories of him 8 and our interaction with him.

9 The judges of our Circuit who sat 10 during his time can remember his stewardship as 11 Chief Judge as a time of great good will and cordial 12 judicial relations. Now, his biography has been 13 noted in so many recent news articles.

14 An early achiever, he served on the 15 Federal Trade Commission at the age of 34. He was 16 appointed by President Lyndon Johnson to the U.S.
17 District Court at the age of 36 and by President 18 Carter to the Third Circuit Court of Appeals at the 19 age of 49. He taught at the law schools of Harvard
20 University, the University of Michigan, New York
21 University, the University of Pennsylvania, Stanford 22 and Yale. His books have been written about and 23 highly regarded. I brought my copies here today. I 24 couldn't resist.

25 "In the Matter of Color," which was

1 published about 1978. He autographed it for me.
2 Obviously, I treasure it. At that time I had been 3 nominated but had not yet been confirmed. And he 4 wrote, "To Anne: Welcome, with confidence in your 5 ability," and so on. Very nice warm comments. "A 6 Leon Higginbotham, June 22nd, 1979."

7 And then in 1996 he published -- let me 8 just mention. Among the noted praise for this "In 9 the Matter of Color," let me just mention. I
10 circled it last night because I wanted to share it 11 with you. Judge Aldisert of the Third Circuit Court
12 of Appeals had written, and it was on the jacket, 13 here, this book. "In the Matter of Color" -- "It is 14 not just a history of blacks. It is a history of us
15 all. Higginbotham does this with the style of a 16 polished essayist, the calm analysis of a brilliant 17 judge and the formidable research of an 18 indefatigable scholar."

19 And then "Shades of Freedom" published 20 in 1996. "Racial politics and the presumptions of 21 the American legal process." Again, an autograph 22 seeker I was. I have my autograph. And he wrote,
23 "To Anne: The Chief Judge from my home town."
24 Because, you know, he was a Trentonian. "A Leon 25 Higginbotham. 9-22-96."

1 At the time -- I can't get away from 2 the jacket. I circled this. I wanted to just share 3 that comment with you. Senator Paul Simon, former 4 U.S. Senator, State of Illinois, quote: In my 5 lifetime two giants of the bench did not make the 6 Supreme Court. Learned Hand and Leon Higginbotham.
7 Now one has written a book you could expect from 8 him. Eloquent, scholarly, compassionate and a 9 ringing call for justice.

10 At the time of his death, Judge 11 Higginbotham was Public Service Professor of 12 Jurisprudence at Harvard University, teaching the 13 faculty of the College of Arts and Sciences, in the 14 Law School and the John F. Kennedy School of 15 Government. He was Of Counsel to Paul, Weiss, 16 Rifkin, Wharton & Garrison in the New York and 17 Washington offices. Judge Higginbotham had been the 18 recipient of more than 60 honorary degrees and in 19 September 1995 President Clinton awarded him the 20 Presidential Medal of Freedom, the nation's highest 21 civilian honor.

22 We remember this great and good man.
23 Personally, I will carry his memory in my heart and 24 mind for the rest of my life.

25 Each year at this conference -- I'd

1 like to thank you for the invitation and to express 2 my appreciation to this Association for the 3 consistently constructive job it does in enriching 4 and enhancing the level of service in the federal 5 courts.

6 Year after year this Association has 7 provided high-level educational programs, and I see 8 we're in for one today, for the benefit of the bench 9 and bar. Its members serve the federal court as 10 arbitrators and mediators. There are in this room 11 members of the U.S. District Court Lawyers Advisory 12 Committee, members of the Civil Justice Reform Act
13 Advisory Committee. Members who work extremely hard 14 attending meetings, planning meetings, working to 15 improve the professionalism of our Court.

16 The members of this Association serve
17 as pro bono counsel and specific pro se assignments 18 from the judges of this Court. For all of this we 19 are extremely grateful and it is my purpose today to 20 thank you.

21 To the litigators in this group, let me 22 just quickly say that the Court is still trying to 23 seek to improve its jury utilization figures. At 24 one point, just a few years ago, we were ranked 25 among the lowest districts of the 94 judicial

1 districts within the federal system in efficient 2 cost-benefit usage of jurors. We were in the 3 company of the Northern Mariana Islands.

4 Good news. We've improved
5 substantially. We are now ranked in the 30 percent 6 usage range, which is about the national average.
7 The goal, you know, is to reduce the cost of 8 bringing jurors into the courthouse who are neither 9 seated on a jury or challenged. In other words, we 10 are ranked by the number of jurors we bring into the 11 courthouse who are sent home without being voir 12 dired for a specific jury trial. This happens when 13 we overestimate the number of jurors we need to try 14 a case. We overestimate the number of jurors we 15 need to bring in when lawyers settle their cases on 16 the eve of trial without advising the Court clerks 17 in time to call off the jurors.

18 We waste money when lawyers settle 19 their cases on the courthouse steps. We need your 20 help in saving precious federal dollars. We pay 21 jurors $40 a day in contrast to the state courts 22 where they pay $5 a day. We need your help in 23 realistically projecting what your juror needs are 24 on any specific case.

25 It is not just the wasted money, of 1 course, that concerns us. We are also concerned 2 about the public good will, the quality of our 3 public service and the message our court 4 communicates to the outside world through our 5 treatment of jurors. As with other matters of 6 shared responsibility within the profession, we ask 7 your help.

8 Now, many of you know about the 9 modification of the statewide criminal assignment
10 wheel. By vote of the Board of Judges of our Court 11 in September of 1998, the criminal cases in our 12 court are now being assigned with relevance to their 13 geography. This was always the rule with civil 14 cases. But by tradition, because of the great 15 volume of criminal cases coming out of the Newark 16 grand jury, we operated a statewide criminal wheel.
17 So that a Camden bank robbery would just as likely 18 get assigned to a Newark judge as to a Camden judge.
19 A Passaic County or Bergen County drug conspiracy
20 would just as likely be assigned to a Camden judge 21 as to a Newark judge, with all of the attendant 22 inconvenience for the defendants, their families, 23 their lawyers, the government personnel, and so on.

24 The new system is automated. It is 25 functioning well. Camden matters are being assigned

1 to Camden judges. Trenton vicinage criminal matters
2 are being assigned to Trenton judges. And the great 3 volume of Newark-generated criminal matters are 4 being apportioned among the Newark judges with the 5 overflow being sent to Trenton and Camden.

6 The Clerk's office controls for equal 7 distribution of the workload, so that the Newark
8 judges do not get inundated or unfairly burdened 9 with the criminal business of the Court. We are 10 pleased to announce this change because we believe 11 there will be great benefits to the bar, both the 12 government and the defense, and great benefits to 13 the public.

14 Finally, I would like to recognize 15 Judge Stephen Orlofsky for chairing the new Criminal 16 Justice Act Management Panel for our Court. That 17 panel also includes Judge Joseph Greenaway, Judge
18 Garrett Brown, Judge Dennis Cavanaugh, Judge John 19 Hughes and Judge Joel Rosen.

20 The Board of Judges has approved a 21 selected list of 100 attorneys who will be assigned 22 Criminal Justice Act cases on a rotation basis off 23 of the list. Gone are the days when each judge has 24 to rack his or her brain to think of a former law
25 clerk or a former Federal Public Defender or a

1 former Assistant United States Attorney to assign 2 the next Criminal Justice Act case to.

3 We now have in place a system where the 4 judges can feel confident that any one of the 100
5 lawyers on that list, all pre-screened by the Court, 6 can represent any case in our Court.

7 Obviously, if the case is extremely 8 unusual in some way, the judge may still decide to 9 make a special assignment to a particular defense 10 attorney. But that will not be the norm. That will 11 be the exception.

12 In the meantime, excellent training
13 programs are being planned. They're going on for 14 the betterment of the criminal bar. President Mike 15 Himmel, in conjunction with Federal Public Defender
16 Richard Coughlin, held a training session attended 17 by over 150 attorneys on February 20th at the 18 Sheraton Hotel in Woodbridge.

19 Furthermore, opportunities for second 20 chairing exist. If you would like for one of the 21 associates in your office to get the second chair
22 experience, please contact the Clerk's office about 23 that idea. In the meantime, we're very proud of 24 this reform of our C.J.A. program.

25 Great credit goes to John Barry, former

1 President of this Association, Judge Maryanne Trump
2 Barry, Chair of the Judges Criminal Law Committee,
3 Judge Stanley Chesler, Jerry Ballarotto, Rich
4 Coughlin, Public Defender, Bill Walsh, Bill Carroll, 5 Tom Henry, our Probation and Pretrial Staff; all of 6 whose expertise coalesced to make this reformation 7 possible.

8 We hope to see many of you at the Third 9 Circuit Judicial Conference in October of this year.
10 It is going to be held in Pittsburgh at the 11 Doubletree Hotel in downtown Pittsburgh. That is 12 October 17 through 19. It is an open invitational 13 event. Come one. Come all. Early registration is 14 the only limitation. This is Judge Becker's first 15 lawyer and judge conference as the Chief Judge of 16 the Circuit, and he's trying to make it the best 17 conference ever. I must say we're all delighted 18 with him. He has been terrific in every way as 19 Chief Judge.

20 Presumably, there will be a New Jersey 21 District breakfast on the morning of October 19 at 22 7:30 a.m. -- the early call -- to which all New 23 Jersey attorneys are invited to attend.

24 And so I thank you for this opportunity 25 to participate in the program. I was so excited and

1 thrilled to learn that Anthony Lewis is your honored 2 guest. I've been cutting out his columns and 3 circulating them to my friends for years. I have 4 the utmost admiration for his insights, his facile 5 ability to communicate those insights and his 6 values.

7 Again, thank you for this opportunity
8 to join with you in this bench and bar
9 collaboration. This is a professional effort with 10 distinction to spare.

11 Thank you.

12 (Applause.)

13 MS. ALITO: This past year in 14 employment law was truly and extraordinary one.
15 This was the year in which the United States Supreme 16 Court told us that male-on-male heterosexual 17 harassment can be sex discrimination. This was the 18 year that the New Jersey Supreme Court told us that 19 one offensive comment by a supervisor, without any 20 touching, without any threats, without any other 21 comments, in itself can sometimes be enough to 22 constitute actionable harassment in the work place.
23 This was the year in which Judge Susan Weber Wright 24 told us that dropping your pants, exposing your 25 private parts, asking for oral sex and fondling

1 yourself might be gorrish but as a matter of law
2 that was not severe enough to constitute actionable 3 sexual harassment.

4 This was also the year in which that 5 great legal scholar and Ali McBeal's boss, Richard 6 Fish, expressed the view of many employers in this 7 Circuit when he told a client, "You are a man. You 8 are breathing. Under Title 7, you are liable."

9 (Laughter.)

10 Today, to help us understand some of 11 the recent developments in this exciting and 12 sometimes confounding area of law, we have a very 13 distinguished panel. Starting with Neil Mullin, our 14 most distinguished plaintiffs' lawyer, Magistrate
15 Judge Rosen, Judge Bassler, my high school debate
16 partner and Third Circuit Judge Sam Alito,
17 Magistrate Judge Cavanaugh and most distinguished 18 defense lawyer Cynthia Jacob.

19 Judge Alito, one of the first things
20 that employers ask when they get served with a 21 Complaint is how they can avoid going before that 22 most dreaded of all things the federal court jury.
23 How does an employer get summary judgment in the 24 Third Circuit these days?

25 JUDGE ALITO: Thank you, Rosemary.

1 Rosemary promised she would ask me only 2 easy questions. That is not too bad. Obviously, 3 the standard for summary judgment in an employment 4 case is the same as in any other case. There are 5 all sorts of legal questions and factual questions 6 that can come up.

7 But the pattern that I find repeated in 8 the great majority of cases that come before us for 9 summary judgment is this: The typical case we see 10 is the disparate impact case in which the plaintiff 11 does not have much, if any, direct evidence of 12 discriminatory animus. The plaintiff makes out a 13 prima facie case, which is not terribly onerous. In 14 a-failure-to-hire case that would be the plaintiff 15 is a member of what is called the protected group 16 which can be basically any group these days.

17 Apply for the position. Did not get 18 the position. Possessed the minimum qualifications 19 for the position and the position went to someone 20 who was in a different group. A woman applied and 21 it went to a man. A man applied and it went to a 22 woman.

23 The burden of production then shifts to 24 the employer to produce evidence of some legitimate 25 reason for the employment decision and that is

1 almost always satisfied.

2 I've never seen a summary judgment case
3 in which that was not satisfied by the employer.
4 Then under our Circuit's case law -- and this is 5 where we differ somewhat from a few of the other 6 Circuits -- the employee has to show either 7 discrimination the old fashioned way, with regular 8 evidence and that is not typical, or the employee 9 has the burden of showing that the employer's 10 articulated reason for the employment action was not 11 its real reason; that it was a pretext for 12 discrimination. And this is where we find most of 13 the summary judgment cases fought out.

14 The employee attempts to show that the 15 employer's reason wasn't the real reason by showing 16 procedural irregularities or by showing that the 17 employer's decision was such a really bad -- the 18 employer's decision was such a really bad decision 19 that it cannot be -- the reason given cannot have 20 been the real reason.

21 The employer argues: There may have 22 been some procedural glitches; the decision might 23 not be a great one, but we're not required to make 24 good employment decisions. We're not required to be 25 procedurally perfect. This was our real reason.

1 And between these two rather -- these 2 two positions, which can be very close, the decision 3 is made whether summary judgment can be sustained or 4 not. Whether a reasonable jury could conclude that 5 the employer's reason was not its real reason, which 6 permits but doesn't compel an inference of 7 discrimination.

8 MS. ALITO: Judge Bassler, do you think 9 that defense lawyers make summary judgment motions 10 too often?

11 JUDGE BASSLER: Before I answer that 12 question, I just wanted to say one initial thing. I 13 find myself sitting with an appellate judge to my 14 left and a magistrate to my right and I think there 15 is some symbolic inner meaning to that.

16 It reminded me of the story of the two 17 Federal District Court judges whose hobby was to go 18 about Sunday mornings in a balloon. One morning the 19 fog came in and they got lost and they let some air 20 out of the balloon and they came down over this golf 21 course and they saw two gentlemen down there playing 22 golf. So they yelled down and said, "We're lost.
23 Where are we? Do you know where we are?"

24 The one golfer said, "You're over the 25 fourth tee."

1 So they went back up again. One judge
2 said to the other -- he said, "They must have been 3 appellate judges or they must have been magistrate 4 judges.

5 "Why do you say that?

6 "Well, we asked them a simple clear 7 question and we got a quick succinct answer. But we 8 still don't know where we are."

9 (Laughter)

10 The answer to your question is no, I
11 don't think so. The reason I say that. My thinking 12 about summary judgment motions has evolved.
13 Originally, when I first came on the bench, I came 14 with an experience from being in the state court 15 where, as a practical rule, you hardly ever granted 16 summary judgment because you knew it was never going 17 to be sustained.

18 And I recognized early on that the 19 atmosphere had changed in the federal system. And 20 over the years I recognized where there was a 21 meritorious or lack of meritorious claim and laid it 22 out and followed the criteria, your summary judgment 23 would be affirmed.

24 Judge Cavanaugh, who does just an 25 outstanding job, as you all know, and I have debated

1 over the years. Is it better to suffer the burdens
2 of the summary judgment motions where very often 3 there is a factual dispute, or do we suffer through 4 three or four days of trial and discover that there 5 is no merit to the case?

6 And I've gone back and forth on the 7 issue. I've now decided that it is better up front 8 to see whether or not there is a meritorious case, 9 do the extra work on summary judgment and go from 10 there.

11 My more recent experiences tell me that 12 I would rather do that than waste trial time to 13 discover there is no merit. So I don't think so.

14 MS. ALITO: Cynthia Jacob, how does a 15 good defense lawyer decide whether they're going to 16 make a motion for summary judgment in the case?

17 MS. JACOB: It is very strictly based 18 on the facts you have before you and the prima facie 19 case for whatever kind of discrimination case you're 20 handling. Most often, as Judge Bassler pointed out, 21 the plaintiff will have made out a prima facie case 22 and the defense will, of course, come up with the 23 legitimate business reason why they did whatever it 24 is they did, and then it falls in that gray area of 25 was that legitimate business reason really a cover

1 for something else?

2 And if the facts are such that there is 3 absolutely no evidence to indicate that the 4 legitimate business reason is anything but a 5 legitimate business reason, obviously you go for 6 summary judgment. And, very often, it really is a 7 fact-on-fact case-by-case analysis in all instances.

8 MS. ALITO: Neil Mullen, Cynthia makes 9 that motion and it is denied. Do you as a 10 plaintiff's lawyer gain from that, aside from the 11 fact you'll end up in front of a jury? Do you gain 12 other tactical advantages?

13 MR. MULLEN: Well, sometimes a summary
14 judgment motion educates me about the detailed 15 aspects of the defense. I might have missed it in 16 my discovery. Now I can force them to spell it out.
17 Then they lost the motions. I have the best of both 18 worlds. They know "I'm going to face a trial."
19 They lost.

20 So the settlement value of my case has 21 gone up. That is what it does. There is a world of 22 difference between the state court and federal 23 court. Judge Bassler said there is a plethora of 24 decisions in the federal court to throwing 25 employment cases out on their nose. I think the 1 federal court is sort of a hostile environment

2 sometimes. It doesn't happen as much in the state
3 court.

4 When I read the opinions that were 5 given to me today, it is as if I've been watching 6 the musings of a very intelligent but very 7 Republican jury. The judiciary is doing what I
8 think a jury should do. They're making decisions 9 about fact issues that should be left to the jury.
10 So summary judgment motions are very dangerous for 11 plaintiffs in the federal court. That is one of the 12 reasons why we try to state out of federal court 13 when we have employment cases.

14 MS. ALITO: In light of employment 15 cases these days, we see that, in addition to naming 16 the employer as a defendant, a number of defendant 17 employees are named. Maybe the individual named as 18 the sexual harasser in those cases but also a number 19 of supervisory employees. So we frequently have a 20 case where there is an employer and five or six 21 individual employees named as defendants.

22 The Third Circuit has made clear that 23 under Title 7 individual employees can't be held 24 liable but, of course, under the New Jersey Law 25 Against Discrimination, which is the basis of many

1 claims in federal court, it is an entirely different
2 story. The Third Circuit this year has given us
3 some views as to when individuals can be liable 4 under the state law.

5 Cynthia, could you fill us in on that?

6 MS. JACOB: Well, I'm going to pick up
7 on Judge Bassler's theme here except I'm going to 8 reverse it. Here the decisional law has not been 9 quick. It has not been succinct and we still don't 10 know where we are.

11 The case that everybody is citing most 12 recently is Failla, F-a-i-l-l-a. In that case the 13 Third Circuit held for the first time that the New 14 Jersey Supreme Court, if it ever decided the issue, 15 would follow the Restatement of Torts Section 16 876(b), which says that an employee aids and abets a 17 violation of the LAD when he knowingly gives 18 substantial assistance or encouragement to the 19 unlawful conduct of his employer.

20 So you got a knowing understanding that 21 there has been a breach of the law and then there is 22 substantial assistance.

23 Now, prior to that time we had Judge
24 Irenas writing in a very -- couple of very long 25 opinions, Tyson and Hurley. He applied the criminal

1 standard for individual liability. The Third
2 Circuit said: No, it is a heightened burden.

3 The Restatement of Torts has a higher 4 burden because it has to be substantial
5 encouragement. You got to do something affirmative.

6 But the irony of it is Judge Irenas'
7 decision in Tyson was affirmed by the Third Circuit
8 as well. So we've got in a sense still a problem.
9 Which is it? Is it the Tyson standard, the criminal 10 standard, which is slightly lower, or the Failla 11 standard, which is slightly higher?

12 I think many of us would truly be 13 thrilled if the New Jersey Supreme Court would 14 finally decide this issue. Right now we got -- we 15 got another train that is on the track. Judge 16 Simandle in a case called Behrens, B-e-h-r-e-n-s, 17 decided that there could be no liability 18 individually under the LAD just as is the case under 19 Title 7.

20 So we got three different theories
21 swirling around. Most of us believe that for the 22 moment Failla is the law, but who knows? The 23 Supreme Court may come up with a fourth approach to 24 the whole problem.

25 MS. ALITO: This is one of those issues

1 where I think everyone would like to see the New 2 Jersey Supreme Court rule on that. The Third
3 Circuit in other contexts has talked about a 4 certification procedure which some other
5 jurisdictions employ with respect to unsettled 6 questions of state law.

7 Judge Alito, how would such a procedure 8 work?

9 JUDGE ALITO: Typically, there is a 10 state statute. Delaware and Pennsylvania, on an 11 experimental basis, which permits either the Court
12 of Appeals or the Court of Appeals and the District 13 Court to certify a question to the highest court of 14 the state and, typically, the decision by the 15 highest court of the state -- then they have the 16 discretion to take the question or not take the 17 question, if they want.

18 Some of us have been pleading for a few 19 years now for the New Jersey Supreme Court to join 20 virtually all of the state Supreme Court's around 21 the country and accept certification.

22 My colleague, Judge Bassler, and one of 23 my current law clerks, Michael Potenza, has written 24 a wonderful article in the Seton Hall Law Review 25 going over this point. But, apparently -- I had

1 never thought and I know that Justices might 2 disagree with me. I never thought there was 3 anything the New Jersey Supreme Court thought it 4 lacked the power to do.

5 The one thing they apparently don't 6 have the Constitutional power to do is to accept 7 certification on questions from the federal court.
8 Maybe that is true as a matter of state
9 Constitutional law. But as a matter of policy, it 10 would certainly be a benefit if they could take 11 certifications from these tough state law questions.

12 MS. ALITO: Judge Bassler.

13 JUDGE BASSLER: I just wanted to add a
14 footnote to that. Interesting enough, in the Failla 15 case at page 1540 there is a Footnote 4 in which the 16 Court notes, "We note at the outset there is very 17 little New Jersey case law interpreting the relevant 18 provisions of the LAD as applied to individual 19 employee liability. This case again demonstrates 20 the difficulties associated with the lack of a 21 certification procedure in New Jersey. See Heck
22 versus Trump Taj Mahal Associates." Citing Judge
23 Becker." Noting that the "States like New Jersey 24 lacking a certification procedure face the threat 25 that the federal courts will misanalyze the state's

1 law."

2 Recently, California adopted a
3 certification procedure by rule. More recently 4 Pennsylvania adopted a certification procedure by 5 rule on an interim basis for a year to see how it 6 would work.

7 I have the feeling that there is a
8 renewed interest by members of the Supreme Court of 9 New Jersey in revisiting their earlier decisions.
10 If any of you have the opportunity of talking to one 11 of the Justices one on one, I would hope you would 12 use that as an opportunity to advance the concept of 13 certification. I think it is back on the table. It 14 certainly -- I would urge you to urge them to 15 rethink their position.

16 MS. ALITO: Judge Cavanaugh, when you
17 get in one of these employment cases in which there 18 are five or six individual defendants in addition to 19 the employer, does that present any particular 20 problems in management? Do you think that helps the 21 plaintiff, hurts the plaintiff or depends upon the 22 case?

23 JUDGE CAVANAUGH: I think it basically 24 depends upon the case. You know, more pockets to 25 pick is always the way to look at it. Normally,

1 though, it winds up that the employer is picking up
2 the tab anyway and usually paying the freight. I 3 don't know whether it makes much difference.

4 MS. ALITO: Judge Rosen.

5 JUDGE ROSEN: I think that sometimes
6 folks over-name, add too many parties. I understand 7 in the beginning of the case why you would do that.
8 But I believe it often complicates cases and doesn't 9 really help you out or add to your position and can 10 make the case a case management nightmare and also 11 more expensive.

12 I find that the more experienced
13 attorneys tend to try to hone in a little bit more.
14 But, again, obviously, I would agree with Dennis.
15 It varies case to case. I think there is sometimes 16 over-pleading.

17 MS. ALITO: Neil, when you are 18 preparing a Complaint and deciding who you are going 19 to name as a defendant and you're thinking about 20 whether to name a number of individual employees, do 21 you really want to name five individual employees
22 and have not just Cynthia Jacob as defense counsel 23 but four other defense counsel up there against you?

24 MR. MULLIN: You make a good point.
25 Generally, plaintiff's counsel don't want

1 individuals at all. They only humanize the 2 corporation at trial and give the jury a much lower 3 net worth to consider on the punitive damage phase.

4 You also don't want five lawyers
5 cross-examining your witness at depositions or at 6 trial. Individuals often get into these cases 7 because we want to ruin diversity and sometimes that 8 works and sometimes that doesn't.

9 Generally, plaintiffs' lawyers
10 shouldn't bother naming individuals unless they have 11 a unique reason. Sometimes you need to name an 12 individual because you need to have their testimony 13 in deposition have the status of a party admission.
14 Otherwise, you won't be able to admit it in court.

15 An out-of-state witness. You have that 16 general -- I advise the plaintiffs' lawyers not to 17 name the individuals. Name the corporation.

18 MS. ALITO: Judge Bassler.

19 JUDGE BASSLER: In my experience -- in 20 the three cases recently tried, no individuals ended 21 up at the trial.

22 MS. ALITO: Do you think that was a 23 plus for the plaintiffs?

24 JUDGE BASSLER: I think so.

25 MS. ALITO: Cynthia, when a case comes

1 in to you, sent to you by an employer and there are 2 a number of individual defendants named in that 3 case, too, do you represent all of them?

4 MS. JACOB: That is an extraordinarily 5 tricky area and everyone faced with that problem has 6 to be acutely aware of the ethical implications of 7 joint representation.

8 More often than not, you have to find 9 out what the various individual defendants know in 10 such a way that you don't ruin your own status as 11 representing the corporation. This can be 12 difficult. There are certain rules of thumb that 13 most defense lawyers have developed. That is, 14 unless proven otherwise, if there is an individual 15 defendant in a sexual harassment case, they are 16 shipped out. You don't talk to them until they got 17 a lawyer and then and only then do you talk to them 18 in the presence of their own attorney.

19 In other kinds of discrimination cases
20 it is a little bit different. The presumption there 21 is that you probably can represent the joint 22 defendants particularly when it is a routine 23 decision to hire, fire, promote, et cetera. Because 24 then the company is going to be relying upon what 25 the individual -- what the individual defendants

1 say. They're backing the decision of their people, 2 so to speak. And if you can ascertain that that is,
3 in fact, the case and ascertain it quickly, then it 4 is to the advantage of the defense to represent all 5 of the defendants. But it is a very tricky area.

6 And even when you can represent all of 7 the defendants, you sometimes have to send out a 8 letter indicating you have a right to separate 9 counsel, indicating there are certain instances 10 where your case may diverge from that of the 11 corporation, et cetera.

12 So be very careful when faced with the 13 Complaint that names five or six individuals 14 regardless of the kind of case it is and make sure 15 you do enough investigation before you start talking 16 to them to ascertain what your position vis-a-vis 17 those people is.

18 MS. ALITO: Cynthia, how about the 19 question under the particular cases on joint 20 representation that can constitute a ratification of 21 the employee's conduct?

22 MS. JACOB: I know you believe it can.
23 I think there are certain instances where it can.
24 There are certain instances where I don't think it 25 does represent a ratification. Again, it depends on

1 getting as much information from unnamed parties as 2 you possibly can before you make the decision. But 3 Rosemary has a very good point. That is something 4 that does have to be thought about at the beginning 5 of representation. You don't want to go down the 6 road representing everybody jointly. Then find out 7 there is a conflict and then everybody -- you got to 8 get out.

9 MS. ALITO: Judge Cavanaugh, one of the 10 most frequent things brought up by plaintiffs'
11 lawyers and one of the big worries about defense 12 lawyers in employment discrimination cases is the 13 question of fee shifting. The prevailing plaintiff 14 is entitled to counsel fees paid by the unsuccessful
15 defendant. The poor defense gets it only in rare
16 instances where the Complaint was brought in bad 17 faith. Could you fill us in on what the current 18 standard is for evaluating of plaintiff's counsel's 19 claim of counsel fees?

20 JUDGE CAVANAUGH: I have no problem
21 doing that. I'm referring basically to -- I have 22 judge Bassler sitting here. Judge Bassler handled 23 the Blakey case which was --

24 JUDGE BASSLER: I thought you handled
25 it.

1 (Laughter.)

2 JUDGE CAVANAUGH: Did it turn out well?

3 Then I handled it.

4 (Laughter.)

5 JUDGE CAVANAUGH: That case was the 6 pilot -- the airline pilot that sued Continental 7 Airlines for the alleged harassment in that other 8 pilots and other individuals were placing 9 pornographic materials, and the like, in places 10 where she could see them. She sued the airlines and 11 Judge -- the case was before us for a long time.
12 There was a lot of judicial activity in that there 13 were a lot of discovery battles that went on with a 14 little bit of a scorched-earth policy for a while.

15 And a couple of law firms involved.
16 Ultimately, the fees sought were almost $2 million 17 on a case that -- I forget what it was reduced to.
18 It was much lower than that. It was an $800,000
19 verdict reduced partially to around five or six 20 hundred. But it is a reasonableness standard.

21 If you look at that decision, the 22 Blakey decision by Judge Bassler, where he does his 23 usual crossing his T's and dotting his I's, he really 24 sets forth the standard -- the manner in which one 25 can have their fees reduced; the manner in which the

1 fees can be elevated. Why they were or in that case
2 were not necessarily. And it comes down to that 3 lodestar of finding reasonable rates for reasonable 4 time.

5 It is a multiplication. And I think 6 there is a great deal of discretion allowed and one 7 of the problems that we constantly have, of course,
8 is: Is the plaintiff's attorneys, who want to do 9 everything, especially when they know they have a 10 reasonable case because if they're successful, they 11 know they're going to do well. And the Court and 12 sometimes -- sometimes the Court and sometimes the 13 defense, trying to keep the cap on discovery, 14 knowing full well at the end of the case there is 15 going to be an application for fees. That is a 16 constant problem because plaintiff's counsel also 17 says, "We don't want to commit malpractice. We have 18 to do a lot here."

19 A reasonableness standard.

20 MS. ALITO: What about the situation we 21 saw in the Blakey case where counsel fees end up 22 being more than the amount that the plaintiff
23 recovers? What do you do then?

24 JUDGE CAVANAUGH: I know what Judge
25 Bassler did. He reduced them. He looked at this.

1 Again, this is laid out very clearly in his opinion.
2 He looked at this and he determined upon a review of 3 other attorneys similarly situated in the community,
4 doing similar type work with similar experience -- 5 he made comparisons. He made some reductions. He 6 looked at the various levels of experience of the 7 associates working on the case; the fact there were 8 two very able experienced lawyers working on the 9 case.

10 It seems to me every case has two,
11 three, four, eleven lawyers trying. And he had to 12 take that into consideration. He also took into 13 consideration the fact some claims were successful 14 and some were not and he made certain reductions as 15 a result of that. He went through a total analysis.

16 The problem comes up. I know this is 17 going to be one of your questions. I don't want to 18 steal your thunder. I know Joel has the same
19 problems. When there are settlement discussions -- 20 when you have a 50 or $100,000 case with $250,000 in 21 legal fees and that creates quite a problem.

22 MS. ALITO: Yes. Judge Bassler.

23 JUDGE BASSLER: I just wanted to add a
24 couple of things. I'm not sure where you're going 25 on the damage issue. But it is a very thorny area.

1 And I didn't want people to walk away with a 2 misunderstanding of the Blakey decision. One of the 3 issues that arose on the damage case was the fact 4 that the plaintiff was not successful on all of her
5 claims and Continental was making a very strong 6 argument as a result of that there should be either 7 no fee or reduced fee -- substantially reduced fee
8 because of that fact. Blakey I don't think really 9 creates any new law. What it does do is apply some 10 law that has been out there for a considerable 11 period of time.

12 And there is somewhat of a tension in 13 this calculation of the lodestar, a figure. There 14 is substantial body of law that says where the core 15 facts are the same, the fact that the plaintiff is 16 not successful on some of the claims is not a basis 17 for reducing the fee. That is well established law 18 and the New Jersey case, the Rendine case, says the 19 very same thing. Failla is a very interesting case.

20 In re-reading it in preparation for the 21 seminar, I came across another footnote in which 22 this argument came up again about reducing the fee 23 because the plaintiff was not entirely successful.

24 And in Footnote 15 the Court discusses 25 that. Let me just hit a couple of highlights. The 1 Court says, "We reject appellant's argument that the 2 District Court should have deducted time to reflect 3 Failla's unsuccessful claims and his limited 4 success. Although Fiella did not succeed on every 5 claim originally asserted in his Complaint, the 6 successful and unsuccessful claims all arose from a 7 common core fact. Noting the Court may reduce the 8 claimed hours to reflect unsuccessful claims that 9 are distinct in all respects from the successful 10 claims."

11 That is just something I think 12 everybody needs to keep in mind.

13 MS. ALITO: Going back to the question
14 of the impact on the counsel fees and fee shifting 15 on settlement.

16 Judge Rosen, how do you find this 17 impacts your effort to settle cases?

18 JUDGE ROSEN: Well, it can be obviously 19 problematic and also raise ethical issues. It is 20 not unusual to have an agreed-upon figure for -- 21 that the plaintiff will recover. But then the 22 dispute becomes one of what the fees should be and 23 plaintiffs or defendants want to resolve the whole 24 case, understandably.

25 There are different strategies and

1 approaches you take. You try to negotiate it. You
2 try to work it out. Sometimes what we do is settle 3 the claim of the plaintiff and the parties reserve
4 the right to litigate in a hearing the fee issue.
5 And all of those strategies have worked. Sometimes 6 we encourage them to mediate it. Some attorneys are 7 willing to go to binding mediation, which is 8 obviously voluntary, to do this.

9 One practical thing that comes up in 10 these fee petitions, since I have this opportunity I 11 wanted to mention. When you file a fee petition, 12 the local rule requires that the materials that you 13 provide be very specific. And to the extent that 14 the rule doesn't cover it, the more specific you can 15 be in the petition as to your time, your hours and 16 how it was spent and who was doing what, the more 17 likely you are to prevail just because you're 18 providing the information. Gross statements of 19 amounts of money are not terribly helpful and we 20 still get a fair amount of that. It is very hard to 21 break that down and get a handle on it.

22 MS. ALITO: For the other judges.

23 Is there anything else that you see 24 attorneys doing on these fee petitions that they 25 should stop or would be we well advised not to do?

1 Judge Bassler.

2 JUDGE BASSLER: One thing I would 3 advise is just don't assign the responsibility to a 4 paralegal to prepare those affidavits. You should 5 take the time to read the affidavits carefully.
6 Because, if not, sometimes you're going to find some 7 very embarrassing facts set forth in these 8 voluminous affidavits that you would rather not have 9 exposed to the public.

10 JUDGE CAVANAUGH: It should also be 11 known, by the way, if there are not proper 12 objections, the Court probably on their own will 13 not -- in the Blakey decision it discusses the 14 defense has to bring forth these proper objections 15 in order to raise them for the Court to deal with 16 them.

17 MS. ALITO: Neil, I know you'll not 18 find yourself in this situation. We see a lot of 19 less experienced plaintiff lawyers in a case where, 20 at the end of discovery they find that they've spent 21 $100,000 of time on a case that is really a $25,000
22 case and they go in before one of the magistrate 23 judges to try to settle the case and the settlement 24 that is offered by the employer may very well take 25 care of your client's claim, but it will not come

1 close to covering counsel fees. What does the 2 plaintiff's lawyer do then?

3 MR. MULLIN: My feeling is if you want
4 to practice plaintiffs' employment law, then you
5 should never, ever, hold up your client's settlement 6 because you want more fee.

7 When you take on that case and there is 8 a number on the table your client wants, even if you 9 take a bath on the fees, you have to settle that 10 case. Now, that is one point. I think it is 11 unethical to hold up a settlement.

12 Number two, I think there has to be an 13 ethics rule that addresses this issue. I think in 14 the best of all possible worlds, we, the plaintiffs'
15 bar, should have to submit a settlement proposal 16 where there is fee shifting in two pieces, what the 17 plaintiff wants and the fees.

18 The defendant should have to respond to 19 each piece. No one should be allowed to hold up a 20 settlement of the plaintiff based on a dispute over 21 the counsel fees. If the parties can't reach an 22 agreement on the counsel fees, that moves on to 23 litigation. But I think this is a matter that has 24 to be addressed and I hope it will be addressed in 25 the near future by the ethics rules or the 1 procedural rules.

2 MS. ALITO: To the judges.

3 Do you think a rule like that would 4 facilitate settlement?

5 JUDGE ROSEN: I do. I think it is a 6 very good idea. That ethical dilemma has been -- we 7 all had to deal with it on different occasions. I 8 think a rule of that nature would be very helpful in 9 providing guidance to the bar and the Court. I like 10 the idea.

11 MS. ALITO: Cynthia, is that something
12 defense counsel can live with, be forced to separate 13 out what you're paying on a settlement and what you 14 may be compelled to pay on counsel fees?

15 MS. JACOB: I'd love to see it happen.
16 If you would like to put a proposed rule to the LAC, 17 I'll put it on the next agenda. The rule is clear 18 for many of us in the defense bar. We believe there 19 are two things that drive these cases; punitive 20 damages under LAD and counsel fees. Many a case 21 goes to trial that should have been settled and 22 settled long before because the counsel fee offer is 23 not sufficient or the overall package is not 24 sufficient.

25 I think Neil's idea is an excellent one

1 and I, for one, would be happy to try to get some 2 action on it.

3 MS. ALITO: Until we see some reforms
4 in this area, does it help avoid this problem by 5 addressing settlement as early as possible in a 6 case?

7 JUDGE CAVANAUGH: Yes.

8 MS. JACOB: Yes.

9 JUDGE CAVANAUGH: In fact, usually is 10 -- the good, experienced plaintiffs' lawyers have 11 figured this out and, normally -- I'm talking 12 settlement when people are coming in to, you know, 13 first have coffee and figure out what we're doing on 14 discovery. They have usually said or I'll ask, 15 "Where does this case stand?"

16 Assuming that there has been some 17 information exchanged and the company or the 18 defendant knows about the case. They will usually 19 at that point make a demand or be in a position very 20 shortly thereafter to at least discuss it,
21 recognizing that demand may very well change 22 depending upon the amount of work that goes on down 23 the line.

24 What we usually do -- what I try to do 25 is get a little bit of discovery underway. The 1 paper discovery. Maybe a deposition of the 2 plaintiff or the main defendant and then get 3 everybody back in because it gets too out of control 4 and talk then.

5 By then everybody has a good idea to be 6 able to evaluate the strengths of the case and then 7 look reasonably at the fees at that time.

8 MS. ALITO: Is that a good time, Judge
9 Rosen, to think about sending the case to mediation?

10 JUDGE ROSEN: Absolutely. I think one
11 of the good things about the New Jersey court rules 12 and the practice that we have here -- I think 13 attorneys are used to it -- is the early 14 intervention of magistrate judges and the ability to 15 chat early about possible resolution of the case.
16 And to perhaps bring some perspective to it either 17 in terms of one of us involved or referring the 18 matter to the Court's mediation or arbitration
19 program. That would be voluntary for arbitration.
20 Those are not mandatory -- not a mandatory part of 21 our arbitration program. But attorneys often, on a 22 voluntary basis, do put employment cases into 23 arbitration.

24 MS. ALITO: Judge Alito, if a case
25 doesn't settle in the District Court and ends up

1 before the Third Circuit, is there a procedure 2 available to help facilitate settlement at that 3 point?

4 JUDGE ALITO: Yes. We started a very 5 aggressive mediation policy a few years ago, which 6 has been quite successful. We have a very 7 experienced lawyer now, Joe Torogosso, who practiced 8 for many years in Philadelphia, who heads the 9 program. And he also enlists the services of a 10 number of district judges in the Circuit to settle 11 cases. Judge Ackerman is very active in working on 12 cases that are not from this district and is 13 successful in settling a lot of them. Under that 14 program a lot of cases are sent automatically to the 15 mediation program and end up being settled and 16 attorneys can also seek to take advantage of it. It 17 is very good program.

18 MS. ALITO: How do lawyers get in that 19 program if the cases are assigned automatically?

20 JUDGE ALITO: You just contact the 21 mediator, Mr. Torogrosso, who is in our -- in the 22 courthouse in Philadelphia and request the case to 23 be considered for mediation.

24 MS. ALITO: One of the other areas of 25 employment law where we've seen a lot of activity in

1 recent years is with the Americans with Disabilities
2 Act. Of course, New Jersey has prohibited
3 disability discrimination for many years prior to 4 the federal statute. But we're seeing an increasing 5 number of cases and increasingly diverse arguments 6 about what employers' obligations are.

7 Under both federal and state law an 8 employer has an obligation to provide a reasonable 9 accommodation to a disabled employee. That is easy.
10 The difficult question is what is reasonable in what 11 situations? And the Third Circuit has issued a few 12 decisions this year addressing that topic that Neil 13 will tell us a little bit about.

14 MR. MULLIN: Well, the Third Circuit
15 has issued opinions in Walton -- a case called 16 Walton, Salley and Gaul. What these cases do -- 17 number one, they lay out the way the Court is going 18 to think about the problem of reasonable
19 accommodation. Burden shifting issues, for example.
20 It is the burden of the plaintiff to show that a 21 reasonable accommodation is possible -- for example,
22 a special kind of chair, a special kind of computer 23 screen -- and to show that the benefit outweighs the 24 cost; it is not some ridiculously costly thing.

25 The burden then shifts to the

1 corporation to show that this accommodation imposes
2 an undue burden. Then there are special wrinkles 3 that have come up in some of these opinions.

4 One thing that is worth noting. The 5 ADA has an exception for drug use. Drug use -- drug
6 addiction can be a disability. The person suffering 7 from a drug or alcohol disability does not get the 8 benefit of the same kinds of rules that affect 9 reasonable accommodation in other cases.

10 For example, if there is a global 11 policy in the corporation that requires a certain 12 task be done standing. Because of drug use or 13 alcoholism, they can't do that. Or some other 14 global or neutral policy, they can't do. They're 15 out. Drug users and alcoholics who cannot perform 16 according to certain neutral policies are out.
17 Versus someone has a chronic back problem and they 18 can't stand. They have to be reasonably
19 accommodated. The other wrinkle is that the ADA 20 eliminates all protection for drug users who are 21 engaged in current, quote-unquote, current drug use.
22 And a battle has raged -- not a battle.

23 A lot of opinions are out there in the 24 courts about what is current. Is current is six 25 weeks ago? Is current seven months ago?

1 The Third Circuit has addressed that 2 and said "current" certainly doesn't have to be 3 today or yesterday. So that has been spoken to.

4 The Gaul case was interesting because 5 it dealt with what is a burgeoning field in 6 disability law. How should corporations accommodate 7 those who suffer emotional disability? Psychiatric 8 disability?

9 There, someone suffered from severe
10 depression and other disorders and their co-worker 11 that they were assigned to work with or the person 12 was causing them stress and causing them basically 13 to move towards a nervous breakdown. The Third
14 Circuit said: Look, we can't get into the business 15 of telling a corporation who to assign employees to 16 work with and who not.

17 The Court made this point; that in 18 determining the costs involved, the reasonable 19 accommodation, you shouldn't just look at the dollar
20 costs. That the administrative costs -- the impact 21 administratively.

22 Now, what I've spoken of is under the 23 ADA, under the federal law. The Law Against 24 Discrimination I believe has much more liberal 25 standards on certain threshold issues. Like the ADA

1 says to be even considered disabled and protected by 2 the Act, one must demonstrate you have an impairment 3 that interferes -- substantially impairs an 4 important life function. There is a lot of law on 5 that. There are many, many summary judgment cases 6 tossing people out for failing to prove that.

7 The Failla case is interesting that 8 Judge Bassler mentioned because it concedes that the 9 LAD has a much lighter standard. You don't have to 10 just show you're handicapped. You don't have to 11 show that your handicap impairs a substantial life 12 function.

13 So, there is no reason on earth, if you
14 satisfy the requirements, why you would bring a case 15 under the ADA that you can bring under the LAD. Not 16 to mention the remedies under the LAD are $300,000 17 capped aggregate compensatory and damages. Whereas 18 the remedies under the LAD are unlimited uncapped 19 punitive damages.

20 MS. ALITO: One more reason you'd like 21 to stay in state court and we'd like to put you in 22 federal court?

23 MR. MULLIN: Exactly.

24 JUDGE BASSLER: We'd like you to stay 25 in state court, too.

1 (Laughter.)

2 MR. MULLIN: We agree.

3 MS. ALITO: Judge Bassler, having made
4 that comment, I'm going to pick on you next.

5 Judge Alito talked about the McDonnell
6 Douglas burden-shifting formula at the beginning and 7 we've all heard about that, for employment
8 lawyers -- the formula for improving employment 9 discrimination through circumstantial proofs. But 10 yet over all these years we're still having debates
11 about how to charge a jury under the McDonnell
12 Douglas formula. Here again, like in the summary 13 judgment context, we come down to what to say to the 14 jury on the question of pretext and I know the Third 15 Circuit this year has given us some more guidance in 16 that area.

17 JUDGE BASSLER: Yes. I forget the name
18 of the case. But I think essentially the ruling in 19 that decision was that you -- the plaintiff is 20 entitled to a jury instruction to the effect that if 21 the jury disbelieves the employer's explanation or 22 its course of action, they may use that as a basis
23 for inferring discrimination, if I have it correct.

24 MS. ALITO: So the jury -- once the 25 employer articulates its legitimate business reason

1 and the jury finds they've done that, the Third 2 Circuit now tells us that the jury must be 3 instructed that if they disbelieve that articulated 4 reason, they can conclude that there was illegal 5 discrimination but they need not conclude there was 6 illegal discrimination. The ultimate issue still 7 remains was the reason for this job action 8 discrimination or not?

9 JUDGE BASSLER: I'm also not sure which 10 Third Circuit decision addressed this question. But 11 I'm amazed that I'm still getting -- usually, it is 12 from attorneys who are not too experienced in this 13 field -- jury instructions that want me to instruct 14 the jury about the whole burden-shifting process.

15 So, the Third Circuit, along with, I
16 think, every other Circuit that has considered this 17 issue, has concluded that that is not something that 18 the jury should be instructed about. That is 19 basically a function for the Court in analyzing the 20 burden of proof and the burden of persuasion. But 21 I'm, surprisingly, still getting those old jury 22 instructions. I don't know where they're coming 23 from.

24 MS. ALITO: And you wouldn't be 25 instructing a jury if that hadn't all been resolved

1 ahead of time.

2 JUDGE BASSLER: Yes, exactly. The 3 summary judgment issue.

4 MS. ALITO: The Third Circuit keeps 5 giving the district courts and the magistrate judges 6 instructions about the details of how to charge a 7 jury. How do we comply with those instructions and 8 still let the jury understand what we're talking 9 about?

10 Anybody have any idea?

11 JUDGE CAVANAUGH: Are you suggesting 12 the Third Circuit is unclear on this?

13 MS. ALITO: Never.

14 JUDGE ALITO: Are you suggesting the 15 purpose of jury instructions is actually to tell the 16 jury what to do?

17 JUDGE ROSEN: That is an outrageous
18 suggestion. We won't tolerate it.

19 MS. ALITO: Judge Bassler.

20 JUDGE BASSLER: I'll bite the bullet.

21 MS. ALITO: When you hone down the jury 22 instructions, you get 60 pages of jury instructions.
23 You cut them down to 40 and are ready to charge the 24 jury. Does the jury get a copy of those 25 instructions to take with it?

1 JUDGE BASSLER: Oh, I do that. Yes.
2 I -- I make sure that the jury -- each juror gets a 3 copy of the instructions and I have found that as a 4 practical matter works very well. I get very few 5 questions back from the jury as to re-reading the 6 instructions.

7 I want -- I want to address the other 8 question, though, that you raised about -- one that 9 I hadn't resolved in my own mind. That is, 10 clarification to the jury or making certain that 11 you're not reversed on your jury instruction. I 12 have to say that I wimp out on that. I have yet to 13 sit down and really give an honest-to-God 14 plain-English instruction. But I've been on the 15 bench longer than I care to remember. I'm gearing 16 up for it.

17 (Laughter.)

18 We'll see what happens.

19 MS. ALITO: Cynthia, you, Neil and I
20 all worked on the state court model jury charges 21 which are not as short as some of us would like. Is 22 there a practical way to condense those jury charges
23 and put them in plain English so that the juries 24 really understand them?

25 MS. JACOB: Well, the trouble is I

1 think Judge Bassler really hit the nail on the head.
2 Whenever you try to do that the appellate court is 3 going to say: Well, you didn't track what the law 4 really is.

5 An interesting example of this is in 6 the state charge we substituted the words "initial 7 case" for "prima facie case" way back when and -- 8 because we thought prima facie is not a concept.

9 It is not in the ken of the everyday
10 person on the street. Now on appeal I'm arguing a 11 case where they use the word "initial" instead of 12 prima facie and it just illustrates the problem of 13 going to simple language because the appellate court
14 is always going to say: Well, that simple language 15 is not the same as the technical language that we 16 think constitutes the law in this area and the 17 charge has got to reflect the law.

18 I think the best we can do is give the 19 jury copies of the written instructions so they can 20 try to piece it together themselves because then 21 there will be somebody in the jury that understands 22 a particular word and there will be somebody who 23 doesn't.

24 At least, they can have an exchange
25 about the charge, itself. But if you just send them

1 in with no written instructions, they can flounder,
2 and often do, all over the place because this area
3 of law, in particular, is very subject to the jury 4 just plain deciding whether what happened was fair.
5 They don't care about the law. Was it fair?

6 MS. ALITO: Should the jury get some 7 form of instruction at the start of the case?

8 JUDGE ROSEN: A lot of us have been 9 experimenting with that in all cases. Not just in 10 discrimination cases. Employment cases. I've done 11 it a few times with the agreement of counsel. They 12 seem to like a little summary.

13 MS. ALITO: Yes, Judge Bassler.

14 JUDGE BASSLER: I try in every case to 15 do that. I can never get the attorneys to agree and 16 I wimp out on that one, too, because I don't want to 17 create another unnecessary issue on appeal. But I 18 think it is crazy, if you think about it, not to 19 give the jury some skeletal idea of what the law is 20 and have them just jump in the middle of this thing 21 with the factual presentation. It is crazy and that 22 is another thing on my to-do list for this year.

23 MS. ALITO: Cynthia, I see you nodding.
24 You would agree to the instruction?

25 MS. JACOB: I would. Having some sort

1 of instruction at the beginning of the case has the 2 jury somewhat focused and gets them off the track of 3 is this fair? Because when they're listening to 4 weeks and weeks of evidence, and often these cases
5 do take a long time to try, they are literally 6 floundering.

7 Where are they going and what are they 8 really looking for? And we know the juries make up 9 their mind well before they're charged. So it makes 10 sense to at least give them some guidance early on.

11 MS. ALITO: Neil, Cynthia has agreed to 12 charge the jury at the beginning of the case. Now, 13 surely, you can't have any problem with the jurors
14 knowing what the law is when deliberating.

15 Neil.

16 MR. MULLIN: It's a wonderful idea, but 17 we probably won't agree on what the charge should 18 be. So we're back to Judge Bassler's problem.

19 MS. ALITO: Assuming that you can agree 20 to what the charge is or you've gotten rulings on 21 what the charge is ultimately going to be at the end
22 of the case. Do you have any problem with the idea 23 of the jurors knowing that while they're hearing
24 testimony?

25 MR. MULLIN: No. I have no conceptual

1 problem.

2 MS. ALITO: I understand the 3 "conceptual problem."

4 MR. MULLIN: It depends on what the 5 word "is" means.

6 (Laughter.)

7 MS. ALITO: Judge Rosen, I understand
8 there are some amendments to Rule 26 in the works; 9 that they may have a substantial impact on 10 employment -- litigation in employment 11 discrimination cases.

12 JUDGE ROSEN: That is correct. Every 13 few years, just when we think we have the Federal 14 Rules figured out, they move to amend them. First 15 of all, I'd like to say my friend and colleague
16 Judge Orlofsky could not be with us today.
17 Yesterday he went to reach for one of his most 18 recent opinions and the pile fell on top of him.

19 (Laughter.)

20 JUDGE ROSEN: So he couldn't come. It 21 deprived us all of our air bag on the way up here.

22 (Laughter.)

23 JUDGE ROSEN: There is in the works an 24 amendment to Rule 26 that radically changed. This 25 is something you might want to take a look at. It

1 has been published in a number of sources. 119 of 2 the Supreme Court Reporter are the proposed
3 amendments to the rules. The rule-making changing 4 procedure is well underway. Before I tell you what 5 the changes are, the comment period is actually 6 already over.

7 And these proposed rules are being 8 submitted to the Court's Advisory Committee on rule 9 making. So this is something that well might 10 happen. It changes Rule 26 significantly in a 11 number of ways.

12 Number one, pretrial disclosures. The 13 ability of a District to opt out has been 14 eliminated. There was a criticism that for 15 attorneys who practice around the country every 16 court had their own way of doing things. So you can 17 no longer opt out.

18 The rule, however, has been limited.
19 Rule 26 disclosures will only now require the 20 disclosure of the identity of witnesses and 21 documents. Supporting information that goes to 22 impeachment only need not be disclosed. That is a 23 radical change. Perhaps, however, what is more 24 controversial is the creation of two types of 25 discovery. Lawyer managed and court managed.

1 Lawyer-managed discovery indicates that 2 parties may obtain discovery regarding any matter
3 not privileged that pertains to a claim or defense
4 in the case. If you want to get further 5 information, and I'm quoting now, "Information 6 relevant to the subject matter," which used to be 7 part of the old rule -- you have to go before a 8 court and show just cause.

9 That is a substantially narrowing of 10 what is available to attorneys in discovery without 11 going to the Court. I'm not sure I understand the 12 difference between discovery relating to the claim 13 or defense on the one hand and, quote, information 14 relevant to the subject matter on the other hand.

15 I could see, however, in the area of 16 employment law, for example, a defendant arguing:

17 Well, if you want files of other 18 persons in similarly situated -- similar situations, 19 then you have to go to the Court and show good 20 cause.

21 That is one reading.

22 I'm not -- by the way, I'm not saying 23 that is the reading. But that is how it could have 24 a major impact in employment litigation. That comes 25 up often, as we know. This substantially limits

1 your ability to get discovery without going to 2 court.

3 The other changes are really less 4 radical. But that is clearly something that is 5 going to cause problems in my view.

6 MS. ALITO: Picking up on that issue.

7 Judge Cavanaugh, is that something that 8 comes up a lot in employment discrimination cases?
9 The plaintiff wants discovery not just about the 10 plaintiff but about every employee in that job 11 category or every employee who ever worked for the 12 company.

13 JUDGE CAVANAUGH: It comes up all the 14 time, you know, for comparison purposes, and the 15 like. Where the problem really occurs is some of or 16 perhaps even much of that which is contained in the 17 personnel file may very well be discoverable. But 18 they're usually just blanket requests for these 19 other ten employees that did get a promotion over 20 the years -- for everything in their personnel file.

21 There is information in there about 22 medical histories, finances, that just aren't 23 relevant under the circumstances. So they have to 24 be narrowed. But certain things on comparison -- 25 for comparison purposes or if they're claiming that

1 somebody was harassing to have other complaints
2 about prior harassment charges; that kind of thing.

3 One other thing. I think there was one
4 other aspect of what Joel was talking about, if I 5 recall reading it right, about the limitation on the 6 kind of depositions. I thought that was a rather 7 radical change.

8 JUDGE ROSEN: There was a presumptive
9 limit.

10 JUDGE CAVANAUGH: For one day, which 11 could be a problem.

12 MS. ALITO: Good change in these cases, 13 Cynthia? Good change in these cases if the rule is 14 interpreted to mean in the typical case you get 15 discovery as to this plaintiff automatically, but 16 you have to go to the Court if you want discovery 17 about 50 other employees?

18 MS. JACOB: Well, it could certainly 19 make it a lot harder for the plaintiffs. I'm all 20 for that. There is no question that right now we 21 are often plagued with discovery requests that are 22 extremely broad. And if the moving attorney, in 23 this case the plaintiff's attorney, can show some 24 nexus as to why it might be relevant, they're going 25 to get the stuff.

1 And discovery -- paper discovery,
2 particularly, as it presently is practiced is 3 onerous on the defendants to the nth degree in many 4 cases. So I think that these are tools that might 5 change the way discovery is conducted.

6 Certainly, if there is a limitation on 7 depositions, it could eliminate a lot of the "I 8 think I'll depose everybody in sight for at least 9 five days a piece."

10 And, you know, I plead guilty to that.

11 Unfortunately, there are some 12 plaintiffs that want to tell their story in such a 13 rambling and diversionary way that you're lucky if 14 you can get anything out of them in one day of 15 depositions. So this will have to be watched very 16 carefully because it will materially increase the 17 burden on the poor magistrates who are already, I 18 think, working as hard as they should and certainly 19 as hard as they can.

20 JUDGE CAVANAUGH: Joel could work
21 harder?

22 JUDGE ROSEN: I could, but not everyone
23 else.

24 MS. JACOB: It bears watching because 25 it will make a big difference.

1 JUDGE ROSEN: There are a few other 2 aspects of the rule that are interesting. The 3 fee-shifting component that notes explicitly the 4 authority of the Court to make a party pay 5 reasonable costs if the discovery that he or she 6 seeks goes beyond the core discovery

7 I imagine that is going to be very -- 8 well, it is controversial.

9 By the way, these rules, if they are 10 approved by the Rules Committee, and I don't know, 11 then they would go to the Judicial Conference, then 12 the Supreme Court, and then the Congress, I believe, 13 has a role in this as well. But assuming this 14 happens, it could be by December of next year.

15 The one other change that I want to 16 note, very briefly, is a change to Evidence Rule 702 17 that essentially would codify to some degree the 18 Daubert, Doherty or Daubert decision (laughter) 19 however you pronounce that -- by laying out what the 20 criterion is but also making it explicit that the 21 gate keeping function would apply not just to 22 scientific experts but other technical experts or 23 others with specialized knowledge.

24 I know the cases have been all over on 25 that. I guess it would be an accountant or things

1 of that sort. So this is a proposed rule which I
2 believe is less controversial and I believe would be 3 helpful.

4 MS. ALITO: Our time is almost up.

5 Before we wrap up, Neil, if you could 6 give one piece of advice to one of the many general
7 practitioners who are moving into the employment 8 field, what would that be?

9 MR. MULLIN: Stay out of federal court.

10 (Laughter.)

11 MS. ALITO: Cynthia, the same question
12 to you. To defense lawyers.

13 MS. JACOB: I could do the opposite.
14 The piece of advice I would give to the general 15 practitioner who now thinks they're going to make 16 their fortune in employment cases is be very weary.

17 Many people think this is an easy field
18 of law. They think there is not a complicated body 19 of law surrounding it. They are wrong and they 20 could end up taking cases that are absolutely 21 meritless and then, $40,000 of expenditures on their 22 part later, they're stuck with the dog of all dogs.

23 So, the first thing they got to do.
24 They got to understand that there is law out there 25 that they've got to learn. And the second thing is 1 they got to learn to assess their plaintiffs.

2 MS. ALITO: Judge Cavanaugh, what is 3 the most common mistake you see lawyers make in 4 employment discrimination cases?

5 JUDGE CAVANAUGH: Not listening to Neil 6 Mullin.

7 MS. ALITO: Judge Rosen.

8 JUDGE ROSEN: I would agree with 9 Cynthia that one of the things that I feel badly 10 about is the end of the day at a pretrial conference
11 when an attorney comes in and goes, "My God, help 12 me. I have 40,000 or 50,000 or $20,000 into this 13 case and it turned out to be a disaster."

14 I guess it is easy for me to say, but I 15 think in the long run you're better off if you take 16 a little more time evaluating your client and your 17 case. I think that is the biggest problem in these 18 cases, since they are so difficult and complicated.

19 MS. ALITO: Judge Bassler.

20 JUDGE BASSLER: The one piece of advice
21 I would give both to experienced and inexperienced
22 lawyers is on the mitigation of damages issue. I 23 can't believe how many times this comes up. We all 24 know that the plaintiff has the duty of mitigating 25 his or her damages, but the burden of proof is on

1 the defendant.

2 I've ended up at the end of the case,
3 where you look at the evidence, and the defendant
4 simply has dropped the ball.

5 MS. ALITO: Judge Alito, lawyers
6 arguing his or her first employment case before the 7 Third Circuit.

8 JUDGE ALITO: Well, what I see that I
9 don't like are briefs that go on and on and on about 10 the boilerplate discrimination law which we know 11 because we have such a huge volume of these cases.

12 What I'm looking for in these typical 13 summary judgment cases is good argumentation about 14 how the facts of the case fit with the McDonnell 15 Douglas framework or whatever the standard of law 16 is.

17 I would just echo what some of the 18 other panelists said about the complexity of the law
19 in this area. I think we have more really difficult 20 legal issues in this area than in almost any other 21 area I can think of. Issues that will make your 22 brain hurt thinking about that.

23 MS. ALITO: Thank you all very much.

24 (Applause.)

25 (Recess.)

1 MR. HIMMEL: At this time I'd like to 2 present to you the President of the Historical 3 Society, Don Robinson, who advises me that he has a 4 very special guest for us. Don.

5 (Applause.)

6 MR. ROBINSON: Thanks, Mike.

7 This morning we are meeting on the eve
8 of a new century. But it isn't the first time that 9 the Court has approached a new century. Project 10 yourselves back 100 years to late 1899. The 11 Honorable Andrew Kirkpatrick, United States District 12 Judge, was the only judge of this Court. He is 13 here. He has a brief message about the Court as we 14 approach the 20th Century.

15 Judge Kirkpatrick was born in 1844. He 16 studied at Princeton and at Union College, earning 17 his degree in 1863. He read law in the office of 18 Frederick Frelinghuysen until 1866. The judge then 19 began his legal career as an associate and partner
20 of Mr. Frelinghuysen in practicing law in Newark
21 until 1874 when he joined the firm of Teese & 22 Kirkpatrick where he remained until 1885 when he 23 became a judge of the Essex County Court of Common 24 Pleas.

25 Nominated by President Cleveland for

1 the Federal Court, Judge Kirkpatrick was sworn in on 2 December 8, 1896.

3 I present to you the Honorable Andrew 4 Kirkpatrick.

5 JUDGE BISSELL: The name, Mr. Robinson,
6 is Frelinghuysen.

7 "Good afternoon. I am pleased to 8 report to you that the state of the United States 9 District Court for the District of New Jersey on the 10 eve of the last century of the second millennium is 11 good.

12 "Let me begin by summarizing the 13 activities of our court for the fiscal year July 1, 14 1898 through June 30th, 1899. The statistics which 15 I will report to you can be found in the Annual 16 Report of the Attorney General of the United States
17 for that fiscal year.

18 "He controls and reports the business
19 of all inferior federal courts, a subject which I 20 will later address as I ask you to look forward with 21 me into the 20th Century.

22 "Criminal actions. In the fiscal year
23 ending June 30th 1899, this Court disposed of 51 24 criminal actions, the largest categories of which 25 were Customs, Internal Revenue and Postal offenses.

1 Of these 51 dispositions, 49 resulted in convictions
2 either by trial or plea of guilty. As of July 1, 3 1899, 48 criminal actions were pending on the 4 Court's docket.

5 "On the civil side, the United States
6 is not a particularly active civil litigant in our 7 court. Only three civil actions in which the United 8 States was a party were disposed of in the past 9 fiscal year and 16 such suits remained pending as of 10 July 1, 1899. Private litigants, however, have been 11 more active in the past fiscal year. Ninety-four 12 admiralty and 74 other civil actions were commenced, 13 a total of 168.

14 "Regrettably, this Court did not enjoy
15 positive clearance in this area, disposing of 73
16 admiralty actions and 65 other civil actions, a 17 total of 138.

18 "The Court's backlog continued to grow
19 and is one of the nation's highest. As of July 1, 20 1899, 383 admiralty suits and 1,337 other civil 21 suits were pending on the Court's docket.

22 "In Bankruptcy, however, the Court
23 enjoyed greater success. One hundred and fifty-six 24 voluntary and 42 involuntary petitions were filed in 25 the fiscal year ending September 30, 1899, a total

1 of 198.

2 "However, 199 bankruptcy cases were 3 disposed of, five by dismissal and 194 by 4 adjudication, resulting in 72 discharges in 5 bankruptcy.

6 "Regarding the Court's fees and 7 expenses. The Attorney General's report reveals 8 that in the fiscal year ending June 30, 1899, 9 $37,490.95 in expenses of this court were paid.
10 Approximately 9,000 of which had been incurred in 11 prior fiscal years. The major expenses included the 12 salary of the United States Attorney, J. Kearny 13 Rice, in the amount of $3,000 and the salary and 14 expenses of the United States Marshal in the amount 15 of $5,100, including the $3,000 salary for Marshal 16 Thomas J. Alcott, himself.

17 "Finally, I am pleased to report that 18 fees collected from both the United States of 19 America and private litigants totaled $8,406.22
20 while the expenses of the office of our Clerk, 21 George T. Cranmer, for such things as clerical 22 hires, stationery, et al., totaled only $2,648.98.

23 "Accordingly, there was a net positive
24 emolument for the office of our Clerk in the amount 25 of $5,757.24 which served as a basis for Mr.

1 Cranmer's compensation.

2 "In short, while the population of 3 private civil suits on this court's docket continues 4 to grow, this court remains fiscally responsible.
5 Its income substantially exceeding its clerical 6 expenses.

7 "Having reported to you the state of 8 the Court's docket and fisc, let me take this 9 opportunity to look ahead to the future of our 10 court. We stand on the brink of a new century, the 11 last of the second millennium. What lies ahead for 12 our court and its bar? If my successor were 13 addressing your grandchildren and great 14 grandchildren 100 years from now what might he be 15 saying in reviewing the work of our court in the 16 20th Century?

17 "Caseload. I predict that the large
18 caseload of this Court will expand dramatically. It 19 already warrants the allocation of a second judge 20 for our district. Moreover, the horseless carriage, 21 however obnoxious it is to our tranquility, will 22 surely become the dominant mode of personal and 23 commercial transportation in the next century, 24 perhaps even eclipsing the railroad.

25 Injury to person and property caused by

1 these machines, when driven across state lines, will 2 surely lead to increased tort litigation under our 3 diversity jurisdiction. The recently completed wall 4 of stain has thrust us into the international 5 community where our diplomatic and commercial 6 involvement can only continue to escalate.

7 Interstate and foreign commerce will surely expand, 8 generating increased litigation excontractu by and 9 against corporations formed in New Jersey under its 10 friendly corporate statutes.

11 "The further business panics like that 12 of 1894 become a regular part of our economic cycle.
13 Increased bankruptcies will also tax the resources
14 of this Court.

15 In its first ten years, the Sherman
16 Antitrust Act has already been employed vigorously 17 by the Attorney General of the United States. It is 18 safe to predict that his efforts and those of 19 business entities seeking to attack a powerful 20 competitor will increase in the next century. This 21 federalization of business regulation traditionally 22 left to our state governments continues an alarming 23 trend which started with the radical reconstruction 24 legislation of 30 years ago; namely, the increased 25 involvement by Congress in our everyday lives.

1 "I sense a perception by Members of 2 Congress that, by pandering to public opinion on 3 popular issues of the day, through the hasty 4 enactment of laws in those areas, they can enhance 5 their own popularity and chances of reelection.

6 "I hope that my successor 100 years 7 from now will not be confronted with a record of 8 such activity during the 20th century, but I fear 9 that he will be.

10 "Finally, and most alarming, the 11 dramatic increase in new attorneys admitted to the 12 bar in the past year. Our new admitees were 32 in 13 1898. A sane number consistent with years past.
14 Figures just in for the new admissions in 1899, 15 however, show 197 attorneys and counselors at law
16 joining the bar of New Jersey and this Court.

17 "It is axiomatic that more lawyers mean 18 more cases and increased competition to secure 19 clients, an alarming, if not unseemly, prospect.
20 Only your restraint lies between us and a litigation 21 explosion.

22 "As you know, throughout its history
23 this District Court has been served by one judge 24 indeed until the creation of the Circuit Courts of 25 Appeal earlier in this decade, that judge-heard

1 cases in the Federal Circuit Court as well.

2 Due to the reasons previously discussed
3 and surely countless others in the next century
4 which we could not even begin to predict, this Court 5 will soon need more judges to assist in moving its 6 docket. Indeed, if I may be so rash, by the year
7 1999, as you stand on the eve of the next 8 millennium, you may be meeting with as many as five 9 or six judges serving this district.

10 You chuckle at this prediction because 11 you feel it is preposterous. I assure you that it 12 is not.

13 I fervently hope that the Judicial 14 Branch will, in the 20th Century, achieve the true 15 equality and independence as an equal partner with 16 Congress and the Executive Branch that the 17 Constitution prescribes.

18 Presently, that is not the case because 19 our budget, appropriations and administrative 20 oversight are all controlled by the Attorney General 21 of the United States. It is no accident that his 22 annual report reflects the docket, business and 23 expenditures of our district courts. To demonstrate 24 the minutia of administration in which the Attorney
25 General involves himself, the Clerk of our Court,

1 Mr. Cranmer, is struggling to obtain a Remington
2 typewriter for use in the Clerk's office.

3 "At the current pace, due to 4 Washington's bureaucratic sloth, I predict that we 5 will be well into the next century before this 6 necessary piece of new technology can be obtained, 7 and God help us if our increased workload ever 8 requires us to beg the Attorney General to authorize 9 the purchase of a second typewriter. What these 10 poor attempts at humor are designed to demonstrate 11 is that the Judicial Branch should control its own
12 budget, seeking and receiving funds from Congress 13 and then expending those resources as needed 14 throughout the court system.

15 "Surely, an administrator in Washington
16 with one or two clerical assistants could accomplish 17 such a task. If this change is made, the Judicial 18 Branch will no longer be dependent for its funding, 19 manpower, equipment and clerical salaries upon the 20 Attorney General, who, wearing his other hat, is 21 also a most active litigant in our court.

22 "The Judicial Branch should become 23 fiscally independent and this conflict of interest
24 for the Attorney General should be eliminated. I 25 hope the Congress will have the foresight to pass

1 legislation which will achieve that goal."

2 Finally, another distasteful but 3 necessary subject. "Judicial compensation. There 4 is an additional threat to judicial independence; 5 the inadequacy of our compensation. I regret to 6 inform you that on this subject I am not optimistic 7 for the future judges of this court.

8 Here, happily, however, we have an ally
9 in the Attorney General, as he stated in his 1899
10 annual report to which I referred earlier. And I 11 quote:

12 "Facts have come under my observation
13 in the course of the administration of this 14 department which justify my calling the attention of 15 Congress to the salaries paid by the United States 16 to its judicial officers."

17 "The compensation of the Chief Justice 18 and the Associate Justices of the Supreme Court was 19 fixed more than a quarter of a century ago and has 20 not since been increased. The earning capacity of 21 the legal profession in common with other business 22 and professions has increased greatly during that 23 period.

24 "It is not an uncommon thing to find a 25 lawyer appearing before the Court in a case where

1 his fee for one argument exceeds the annual salary
2 of the judge. Judges of the Circuit and District 3 Courts are also inadequately compensated. It is 4 also true of those of the Court of Claims."

5 Continuing with the Attorney General's 6 observation.

7 "The courts of the United States are 8 everywhere in the civilized world held in the very 9 highest repute; yet their judges are paid smaller 10 salaries than are allowed by the states to judges in 11 very many jurisdictions.

12 "I believe that an increase of the 13 salary of the Chief Justice and Associate Justices 14 of the Supreme Court to $20,000 a year, of the 15 Circuit Court judges to $10,000, and the district 16 judges to $7,500 a year would be a simple measure of 17 justice and approved by every just-minded citizen."

18 And here I close the quote of our 19 friend the Attorney General.

20 "Like my predecessors," this jurist," I
21 made sacrifices in my income to take this esteemed
22 position which I love. There is not a day when I 23 would rather be doing something else in our 24 profession. For 25 years, or even five years, 25 without a meaningful adjustment in judicial

1 compensation is unconscionable. Probably, once 2 again, it is the concern about their reelection that 3 so paralyzes members of Congress that they must 4 refuse to provide adequate compensation to both 5 themselves and judicial officers. No other reason 6 could explain their lack of foresight and 7 statesmanship. Human nature and political 8 opportunism being what they are, I doubt that my 9 successor or successors who might be addressing you 10 in 100 years from now will be confronting a rosier
11 picture. Surely, adequate judicial compensation is 12 a simple measure of justice approved by every just 13 minded citizen. But Congressional timidity and 14 posturing has put us in this fix here in 1899 and, 15 in all likelihood, will continue to do so into and 16 through the 20th century."

17 I note with interest your panel
18 discussion involving media coverage which follow
19 these remarks of mine. Perhaps, you can enlist 20 their support in convincing our Congressmen and 21 Senators that the public will not turn them out of 22 office for paying to themselves and to us a fair 23 salary.

24 Rest assured, however, that I and those 25 who succeed me will never stray for this reason or

1 any other from performing our constitutional 2 responsibilities and indeed going that extra mile to 3 bring justice to you and the citizens of the 4 District of New Jersey.

5 I thank you. I look forward to 6 addressing you next year, the first of the 20th 7 century.

8 Thank you.

9 (Applause.)

10 MR. ROBINSON: Thanks, Judge
11 Kirkpatrick. We'll see you in 100 years.

12 Joe Hayden, it is all yours. Where is 13 Joe?

14 Joe, it's all yours.

15 (Pause.)

16 MR. HAYDEN: Good morning, everybody.
17 My name is Joe Hayden. On behalf of the Federal Bar 18 Association, I would like to welcome everybody to 19 what we believe will be a very stimulating and 20 provocative panel.

21 For the past couple of centuries the 22 American public has been fascinated with very 23 dramatic high-profile trials. With the high profile 24 and dramatic trials has come media attention which 25 at times has enlightened and at times has bordered

1 on the sensational so that the trial, itself, became 2 almost a media event as opposed to a search for the 3 truth.

4 We can look back at the Scopes Monkey
5 trial. We can look to the Lindberg case, the 6 Shepherd murder trial, the Compolito murder trial in 7 this state. Anybody could have their lists of the 8 top five or top ten.

9 But the truth is we've always had a 10 tradition in our country of the high profile case.
11 But in the past decade or so, it seems as though 12 these high-profile cases, which have been pretty 13 spread out, have almost appeared on a yearly or 14 bi-yearly basis as though we have the high-profile 15 case of the week.

16 In the '90s we need only think of Marv
17 Albert's case, O.J. Simpson's case, the Jesse 18 Tementakois case, the trial that Ted tried in terms 19 of Secretary of Agriculture Espe. And we've had 20 these series of high-profile cases to some extent 21 occasioned by the expansion of media coverage from 22 Cable TV, from web sites and computer coverage. So 23 that there would be increasing competition for news
24 and sensationalism comes increasing media trial
25 problems for the lawyers and for the judges.

1 And it has only confined itself to the 2 criminal area, we need only think in our practice of 3 the Quinlan case, the Baby M case, the O.J. Simpson 4 civil trial, all of the tobacco litigation which is 5 now civil, the sexual harassment cases that were 6 talked about in the earlier panel, all of which were 7 civil.

8 So that this is not a phenomenon that 9 is unique to the criminal bar. We are very 10 fortunate that we've had a very -- we have a very 11 distinguished group of panelists who have given of 12 their time to be with us today and we're going to 13 address a number of these issues.

14 First of all, sitting to my left is 15 Judge Maryanne Trump Barry, who has been a federal 16 judge for the last 15 years. She was a First 17 Assistant United States Attorney and Chief of the 18 Appeals Section and has also served as the Chief of 19 the Criminal Law Committee of the Judicial 20 Conference.

21 Sitting beside her is Judge Garrett
22 Brown, who was the Assistant United States Attorney
23 and the Executive Assistant United States Attorney
24 who was part of the trial team in the Addonizio
25 prosecution for the City of Newark and the Atlantic

1 City prosecution. Judge Brown has been on our bench
2 for 13 years.

3 Judge Joseph Irenas has been on the 4 federal bench for seven years and was a senior 5 litigating partner for McCarter & English where he 6 tried complex cases and high-profile cases both in 7 New Jersey and throughout the country.

8 The gentleman to my left of Judge 9 Irenas is John Q. Kelly who has come to be on our 10 panel from New York. John has a national civil 11 practice and he does a fair amount of criminal work, 12 also. He was one of the two lead counsel in the 13 O.J. Simpson civil trial on behalf of the plaintiffs 14 where he successfully prosecuted that case. He's 15 been involved in the Macy's Parade accident case, 16 the injuries arising out of the Macy's parade a 17 couple of years ago, and a host of other pieces of 18 complex litigation throughout the country. All of 19 his civil litigation is high profile and he has also 20 served as the media correspondent for Fox TV in 21 connection with litigation matters.

22 Faith Hochberg, our United States
23 Attorney, has joined us on the panel. Faith tried 24 high-profile cases as an Assistant United States
25 Attorney. She was with Cole, Schotz and litigated

1 major cases. Had positions in Washington and for 2 the past five years has been our United States 3 Attorney. I am told by the historians that is the 4 second longest term for a United States attorney 5 since, at least, the early '50s. So we're very 6 happy that Faith is with us.

7 Ted Wells is somebody that is known to 8 everybody in our district. Ted has handled 9 high-profile civil and criminal cases throughout the 10 country. He represented lead counsel in the state
11 trial involving Secretary of Labor Donovan years ago
12 in The Bronx with Raymond M. Brown. He recently 13 successfully defended Secretary of Agriculture Espe.
14 He has represented Michael Milken in much of Michael 15 Milken's civil litigation and Ted is literally so 16 busy that he's going to leave around twelve o'clock 17 for a conference call on a national case he's in the 18 middle of. But Ted actually flew back last night.
19 I want to express my appreciation and the 20 Association's appreciation to be with us today and 21 he's actually leaving today the -- and Judge Barry; 22 she looked up. She flew back last night, also. She 23 has our appreciation, too. She came in around one 24 o'clock, also.

25 Raymond M. Brown is sitting to Ted's

1 left and Raymond was -- is one of the finest trial 2 lawyers in the state. He is a member of the 3 American College of Trial Lawyers, a past President 4 of the Association of Criminal Defense Lawyers. He 5 has served as the anchor for Court TV for the past 6 four years. He also handled a program on legal 7 issues sponsored by the New Jersey Bar Foundation
8 called "New Process." And he still finds time to do
9 some litigation for his law firm, Brown & Brown, 10 where he is partners with a shy, retiring lawyer by 11 the name of Raymond A. Brown who has tried a high 12 profile case, himself.

13 And our final panelist is Jim Willse,
14 who has been the Editor of the Newark Star-Ledger --
15 no longer the Newark Star-Ledger -- the Star-Ledger 16 for the last four years. Prior to that, Jim was the 17 Publisher and Editor of the New York Daily News.

18 Jim was kind enough to appear on the 19 panel the Historical Society did on a similar topic 20 a few months ago and he was cantankerous enough that 21 we asked him back and we are very pleased to have 22 Jim.

23 And my first question, which I want to 24 start out giving to the media folks, is:

25 Do you believe that the media has been

1 fair and responsible in its coverage of high-profile
2 cases? And let's confine the question to the last 3 decade. And whether there were cases you were 4 directly involved in or cases you followed closely.

5 Ray.

6 MR. BROWN: Joe, to begin with, we have 7 to redefine the question a little bit because the 8 term "media" is pretty expansive. For example, 9 although Jim can speak for himself, the Ledger 10 probably is more thorough and balanced in its 11 coverage of legal events than most newspapers around 12 the country.

13 Certainly, there are places like Court
14 TV, towards which I have a bias, which have been 15 pretty balanced in bringing gavel-to-gavel coverage
16 of trials which I can't imagine if you can -- if you 17 try a case or present gavel-to-gavel, it would be 18 much fairer.

19 On the other hand, by and large, most 20 media coverage of trials that get high profile is 21 local and it's in local markets. To the extent 22 television is involved, it is pretty irresponsible 23 in the sense that there is a tendency to look for 24 sound bites, to look for that which is sensational 25 and time is at such a premium because you're talking

1 about a capital-intensive business, that there is 2 not enough time to give balanced coverage.

3 So overall, I would say there have been 4 some media outlets and institutions that have 5 distinguished themselves and been balanced. But, 6 overall, probably, television, local television in 7 particular, gives short shrift to what we think of 8 as due process which puts a certain amount of 9 pressure on the balance on the media and an awful 10 lot of pressure on lawyers.

11 MR. HAYDEN: Jim, what is your view?

12 MR. WILLES: Not surprisingly, it is 13 not very different; particularly the part about the 14 thorough and responsible coverage of the 15 Star-Ledger.

16 (Laughter.)

17 MR. HAYDEN: I like the man who makes 18 the lay up.

19 MR. WILLES: I doubt the word "media"
20 was around when Judge Kirkpatrick delivered his 21 State of the Courts address.

22 I remember when I was a reporter, a
23 working journalist as opposed to whatever it is I am 24 now, the last high profile case I covered was 20 25 years ago. The Patricia Hearst trial which at the

1 time was the trial of the century and attracted 2 worldwide attention. But nothing on the level of an 3 equivalent trial these days largely because the 4 media was not nearly as diverse and fragmented as it 5 is today.

6 As Ray said, there was no cable TV, 7 there was no CNN, there was no court TV. The 8 National Enquirer was in business. But what has 9 come to be called the supermarket tabloids had not 10 reached their full flower as they have now.
11 National talk radio and probably most difficult of 12 all is the Internet. None of that was around and 13 all of it is around now.

14 In self-defense, if nothing else, I am 15 inclined to draw a bit of a line around what we do.
16 "We" being newspapers, the Star-Ledger and other 17 grown-up newspapers, that we can call the press as 18 opposed to the collective media and what our 19 brethren do. Media takes in a lot of territory, as 20 Ray says.

21 It has been my experience, in dialogues 22 like this, that it -- very quickly a discussion of 23 how the media behave veers into a discussion of 24 about how commercial as opposed to public and 25 broadcast as opposed to cable television news

1 behaves; classically, the Six O'clock News. If it
2 bleeds, it leads. That is where the sound bites
3 from in the courtrooms show up. Those are the 4 cameramen that are elbowing each other out of the 5 way for the press conference on the courthouse
6 steps. From where we sit, where we consider 7 ourselves to be responsible, we take our coverage of 8 legal proceedings and the world generally very 9 seriously. There are practices that other elements 10 of the media subscribe to that we don't. We have 11 enough trouble with our own credibility, keeping 12 mistakes out of the paper, doing our job well, 13 without having it made even more difficult by the 14 rub off from the drudge report and the six o'clock 15 news.

16 MR. BROWN: Can I add?

17 It is also important, if we talk about 18 the media, we separate journalism from something 19 else, which is pure entertainment. The highest 20 rated -- legally-related programs right now are 21 People's Court and Judge Judy and programs which are 22 using something that resembles a legal format but 23 are purely for entertainment and have little to do 24 with the law but are watched by more people than 25 watch serious trials.

1 MR. HAYDEN: The Federal District Court
2 judge in the Southern District two weeks ago in a
3 case called Lauro versus the City of New York
4 granted a partial summary judgment in what is known
5 the Perp Walk case. Perp walk is New York police 6 officer lingo which is short for perpetrator.

7 What happened in that case is that Fox
8 News called the New York City Police Department and 9 said, "We're interested in a case. We'd like a 10 photograph of the defendant."

11 The New York City Police Department
12 went upstairs to the holding cell, took the 13 defendant, cuffed him behind his back, brought him 14 down the stairs, brought him out to the parking lot, 15 put him in the back of the police car with his 16 handcuffs cuffed behind his back, drove him around 17 the block so that he could then be photographed as 18 though he were walking into the Police Department 19 after having been arrested.

20 And the Federal District Court judge in 21 that case granted a summary judgment on a civil 22 rights action in the sense that that was a taking 23 under the Fourth Amendment because it was a staged 24 situation which violated the privacy of Mr. Lauro.

25 Now, do you think that is fair and

1 responsible conduct on behalf of the media?

2 Ray?

3 MR. BROWN: I don't think you can 4 criticize the media for that conduct. I don't 5 disagree with the judge insofar as the New York 6 Police Department, which staged the event. If the 7 media can get pictures of people who are part of a 8 story, and if they report the story accurately how 9 can you criticize them?

10 MR. HAYDEN: You don't think you can 11 criticize the media for asking the police to stage 12 the event and walk the guy out and put him in the 13 back of the the car?

14 MR. BROWN: I only read the newspaper
15 accounts. "Stage" is kind of a loaded word. If 16 they said: I understand you got a guy locked up; we 17 need a place where we can get a picture of him and 18 they understood that would be bringing him outside, 19 I don't see how you can criticize the media.

20 Criticize the police for acknowledging 21 and responding to the --

22 MR. WELLS: Hold it. Now, Raymond, you 23 have been --

24 (Laughter.)

25 MR. HAYDEN: This is how he does it at 1 trial. This is how he does it.

2 MR. WELLS: I want to make sure I know
3 who is sitting beside me.

4 There was a time in your life if a
5 reporter -- let's even say from the responsible
6 Star-Ledger --

7 MR. BROWN: They're not responsible as 8 far as I'm concerned. They were involved.

9 MR. WELLS: The truth is starting to 10 come out now.

11 If somebody from the Star-Ledger went 12 to somebody in the U.S. Attorney's office and said I 13 want you to parade Ray's client back out there, you 14 would raise so much hell both about the reporter 15 having the audacity to make the request and the 16 government but you would give fire to both sides and 17 you should, I would submit. I know you're working 18 for the Court TV now.

19 (Laughter.)

20 MR. WELLS: Ray would say no.

21 MR. HAYDEN: In fairness to you, not 22 having read the opinion. But the interesting thing 23 in the opinion is that the plaintiff sued the police 24 officer and the City and the Police Department and 25 left out Fox TV. And it was actually mentioned in

1 the opinion that the issue is whether or not Fox TV
2 could have been joined, also. But, Jim --

3 MR. BROWN: There was no discovery,
4 Joe.

5 JUDGE BARRY: Do you know why Fox was 6 not sued? Because the plaintiff read his Bible and 7 the Bible said, "The meek shall inherit absolutely 8 nothing."

9 Sure, let the reporter -- let them ask.
10 He should have been told no. But he's entitled to 11 ask. Isn't he? You believe in the First Amendment, 12 don't you?

13 MR. HAYDEN: At some point in time we 14 go from being unfair to staging.

15 Jim, what is your view? Do you think 16 that the Perp walk is a fair and responsible 17 practice?

18 MR. WILLSE: This is where I get 19 drummed out of my lodge. I never thought at this 20 dialogue I would part coverage from Ray Brown on a 21 media coverage.

22 When I came back to New York from San 23 Francisco, I discovered the Perp walk. It is a 24 staple of New York journalism. Less so in other 25 markets. By me -- forget whether it was staged.

1 The simple act of parading a defendant down the 2 steps of the precinct house raises a question about 3 prejudicial publicity from the start.

4 I worked at a newspaper, the New York
5 Daily News, that lived on Perp walks. I don't know 6 that we ever asked the cops to stage one. If we 7 did, we probably shouldn't have. But we had the 8 right to do it and they certainly had the option to 9 say no.

10 But I was then and I remain rather 11 conflicted by this because it is a very distasteful
12 process. But it leaves unanswered one question 13 about you've got a crime that is in the public eye.
14 You have an arrest. And there is a need or an 15 appetite on the part of the public for a picture of 16 this person.

17 If you're not going to be in an 18 arraignment to take a picture and there is not going 19 to be a booking photo, then the Perp walk by 20 exclusion becomes that much more appetizing to the 21 media, which is not to defend it.

22 I have not read the case. It always 23 made me very nervous and it continues to do so.

24 MR. BROWN: The reason the word 25 "staged" is so critical, the Marshals claimed, in

1 the Oklahoma case involving McVeigh, they had no
2 choice but to take McVeigh out through the door
3 where the media had access and could film him.

4 So what you saw, every time there was a 5 McVeigh story, was a story of the guy taken by the 6 belly chains and being led from the courthouse -- 7 from the jail to the courthouse.

8 If it was true that there was no other
9 way to take him, then I suppose -- how could you 10 criticize the media for taking a picture or for 11 being aware of it?

12 I think there is a difference between a 13 person saying I want to have an opportunity and 14 those who have an obligation to be concerned about 15 due process and saying we won't cooperate.

16 To suggest to the media, whose job it 17 is to cover the story, that they shouldn't ask is to 18 turn it around and to ignore the responsibility 19 where it should be placed.

20 MR. WILLSE: If the Perp gets walked,
21 we're going to take the picture. I think we all 22 recognize that there is a certain attitude on the 23 part of the police that this is like a trophy.

24 MR. HAYDEN: Okay, Ted.

25 MR. WELLS: I don't know that we're

1 going to draw the line, but there is a line in there 2 somewhere.

3 MR. HAYDEN: Okay. I want to move
4 along.

5 I sidetracked us because it is kind of 6 a current decision that raises a lot of issues.

7 Ted, a general question in terms of the 8 cases you tried and commented on. Do you think the 9 media has been fair and responsible in the last 10 decade in terms of the way they handled high-profile 11 cases?

12 MR. WELLS: In terms of high profile
13 criminal trials, I think as a general rule the 14 coverage is biased in favor of the government. When 15 a defendant has a good day in court, rarely -- this 16 is my personal opinion -- do I think the news 17 coverage captures the fact that the defendant has 18 had a really good day or the government's case is in 19 trouble.

20 If and when there is an acquittal in 21 those rare cases, I think the coverage is fair. But 22 up until that time, I think as a general rule the 23 coverage is usually in favor of the government.

24 Just with respect to TV, though, I will 25 say that during the period when I served as a

1 commentator on the O.J. Simpson case, I would have a 2 microphone in my ear. I'll always remember
3 repeatedly being told "You have ten seconds, you 4 have 15 seconds." That is the type of answer you 5 were required to give because of the format.

6 I think it naturally results in just 7 bad coverage in contrast to, say, Court TV where Ray 8 is able to really deal with the grays that most 9 issues present.

10 MR. HAYDEN: Faith, what is your 11 position?

12 MS. HOCHBERG: As I was listening to 13 Ted, I was remembering that a big box New York Times
14 article -- I can't even count column inches but it 15 was a whole bunch of them -- describing the 16 thrilling dramatic oration given by H. Theodore 17 Wells in defending Espe in his summations.

18 MR. WELLS: It should have been much 19 better.

20 MS. HOCHBERG: And describe Ralph 21 Smaltz's bumbling, and this was well before the 22 acquittal. I think in trials it is generally pretty 23 balanced coverage.

24 Where I have a problem is in pretrial
25 stages. I think that what is happening is that the

1 competition among different media outlets to scoop
2 each other is resulting in far too early speculative 3 press coverage about what the service of a 4 particular subpoena might mean, for example, and 5 causing damage to people that don't deserve it long 6 before indictment.

7 MR. HAYDEN: John, you tried cases all
8 over the country. You pick juries in the wake of a 9 lot of publicity.

10 What is your overview as to the 11 fairness and the responsibility of the media 12 coverage in the last decade?

13 MR. KELLY: First of all, one thing I
14 would like to say I learned a long time ago was not 15 to antagonize the media. Keeping that in mind, I 16 think, overall, they've been pretty fair and 17 responsible in their coverage. I do. You got to 18 keep in mind, just like Ted was talking about or 19 Ray, there are all kinds of time constrictions and 20 things when you're doing commentary or whether 21 you're writing. You have space restrictions and 22 things. You got to remember that.

23 When you look at it relative to 24 reporting on the political scene or in the sports 25 world, I think the responsibility there is roughly

1 equivalent. We have to keep in mind that 2 high-profile cases are extraordinarily newsworthy
3 events.

4 The competition is very intense both 5 between the print media network and the cable 6 networks at night. And in this competition for 7 viewers in the very restricted time frames, they 8 have to cover these cases, I think they do a pretty 9 good job. I'd like to see it better. It is not 10 always accurate. I think with what they have to 11 work with and the time constraints they have, I 12 think, all in all, they do a pretty good job.

13 MR. HAYDEN: Judge Irenas.

14 JUDGE IRENAS: I haven't had the super 15 high-profile cases. That O.J. Simpson type. To the 16 extent that the press covers events which -- real 17 events which actually occurred at trial or hearing, 18 I think they do a pretty good job. Every now and 19 then and, maybe fairly frequently, they'll have 20 technical errors. They'll get certain legal 21 principles wrong. So what? They're reporting to a 22 lay readership; for the most part, lay reporters.

23 On the whole, they do a pretty good
24 job. Where they start manufacturing news is where I 25 think the press begins to get off. Not only in

1 legal matters, but in other matters as well. But 2 the Perp walk, for instance, is a manufactured 3 event.

4 The public is led to think something 5 was really happening. Even if we've just picked the 6 guy up; we're taking him from the wagon; now we're 7 walking into jail to be booked.

8 That never happened. It is 9 manufactured news.

10 I think at the pretrial stage, to 11 follow up on what was just said, sometimes they 12 begin to manufacture news. Because there isn't that 13 much happening, they report things that tend to 14 become somewhat manufactured. When they do that, 15 they become a little less responsible.

16 MR. HAYDEN: Judge Barry.

17 JUDGE BARRY: Two comments.

18 I don't think it is coincidental. Or 19 let me just say it is more than merely coincidental 20 that the vote of the Judicial Conference of the 21 United States not to permit television coverage in 22 federal court came shortly after the verdict in the 23 O.J. criminal case. With many of the judges had 24 voted, commenting on, "If it ain't broke, don't fix 25 it." And the reference really was to the sound

1 bites. It was to the shocking. It was to the 2 entertaining.

3 Which, given what everyone said here
4 today, the time constraints, the entertainment that 5 the television media, at least, is looking for is 6 what is going to hit people.

7 I have seen, personally -- I cannot 8 speak for my brother and sister judges. I have seen 9 the impact that the O.J. case has had on the trial
10 of a criminal case, where you actually have jurors
11 looking for DNA evidence in a fraud case (Laughter)
12 and wondering why it was not presented.

13 I think that is something that is going 14 to live with us for quite a while.

15 MR. HAYDEN: How did a defense attorney 16 plant that seed?

17 Judge Brown, this panel is about more
18 than media bashing. What are the responsibilities 19 of the lawyers in the high profile case under the 20 RPCs?

21 I know you teach a course in 22 professional responsibility. Could you in a 23 streamlined fashion lay out for us the ethical 24 duties of the lawyers in our district.

25 JUDGE BROWN: All right. To understand

1 the professional restraints on both the lawyers and 2 the judges, I think you have to focus on Rule of 3 Professional Conduct 3.6. That came about 4 essentially because of the Shepherd case where the 5 Supreme Court, Justice Clark writing, talked about 6 the media circus, the carnival atmosphere, and said 7 that the judge should have more control over both 8 the courtroom and the participants. 3.6 was a 9 response to that.

10 In Gentilli there was a statement made 11 by a lawyer, assertedly in response to prosecution 12 comments, which led to a change in 3.6, which New 13 Jersey has not adopted. But, basically, the plain 14 English answer: You can't get into trouble for what 15 you don't say.

16 The Rules of Professional Conduct have 17 been sometimes adopted in a gag order by the courts 18 that has the advantage of binding the investigators 19 and parties who are not bound by the Rules of 20 Professional Conduct.

21 I would note one other thing.
22 Everybody talks about O.J. Bear in mind that at the 23 time the O.J. case was tried California was unique 24 in the jurisdictions in not having a rule 25 controlling comments by counsel similar to 3.6. As

1 a result of O.J., California did enact that rule.

2 Bear in mind, also, that while 3 controlling the courtroom the judge not only has to 4 maintain order and decorum be patient, dignified, et 5 cetera, but must abstain from public comment about a 6 pending or impending procedure. And, of course, the 7 New Jersey rule says any court to require similar 8 abstention on the part of court personnel.

9 So when the media tries to contact the 10 courts for comment and are told everything occurs in 11 open court, that is strictly true. As a matter of 12 fact, the Supreme Court of New Jersey was faced with 13 the inquiry by a judge who wished to talk on Court
14 TV about other cases and they said no, you couldn't 15 do it.

16 The Tenth Circuit had a case where a 17 judge went on Night Line to discuss an injunction he 18 had entered. Of course, you can imagine what the 19 result is. Reversal and recusal. So there are very 20 definite limitations on both the lawyers and the 21 courts.

22 MR. HAYDEN: Judge, the RPC appears to 23 be drafted or anticipate lawyers' comments during a 24 jury trial. Would the RPC apply to a bench trial?
25 We see the major civil piece of litigation being

1 tried in our country this year has been Microsoft
2 which is a bench trial. We regularly see comments
3 by attorneys or public relations firms each day 4 about who won, who lost, what the import of the 5 testimony was.

6 From your analysis of the RPC, do they 7 apply to a bench trial?

8 JUDGE BROWN: Most definitely. If you
9 look at it, it prohibits a comment that the lawyer
10 knows or reasonably should know or will have a 11 substantial likelihood of materially prejudicing an 12 adjudicative procedure in the matter. Period.

13 However, if you look at Comment 6, they 14 do distinguish between criminal jury trials, civil 15 trials and non-jury hearings or trials which may be 16 less affected and say the rule still places 17 limitations on comments, but the likelihood of 18 prejudice may be different as a result.

19 So your answer is yes and no.

20 MR. HAYDEN: Judge Irenas, do you
21 believe that the RPC would apply to a bench trial?

22 JUDGE IRENAS: Well, technically, it
23 does because it applies to an adjudicative 24 proceeding. In the real world you have certainly an 25 endless number of cases that say that a judge,

1 acting as a trier of fact, can hear inadmissible
2 evidence because the judge, presumably, can sort out 3 at the end of the day what is admissible or what is 4 not admissible and decide the case accordingly.

5 Also, the rule had the Constitution in 6 one eye. And the words here are "a substantial 7 likelihood of materially prejudicing the 8 adjudicative proceeding."

9 The Fourth Circuit, by the way, has 10 adopted a lesser standard that said the rule in -- 11 was that Maryland? Whatever state that was in the 12 Fourth Circuit. It could only be reasonable 13 likelihood. So it is a lower standard.

14 But I think that the substantial
15 likelihood that the judge trying Microsoft is going 16 to be influenced because a lawyer gets out on the 17 front steps and gives a biased -- let's call it 18 biased -- a biased view of what is happening in the 19 court -- from what I hear about that Judge, not 20 very likely.

21 In the real world I think the impact of 22 this rule on a true bench trial, a civil bench 23 trial, is not very much.

24 JUDGE BARRY: I would say you don't 25 even have to start parcing substantial likelihood

1 and what fits within it because you can go to the 2 catch-all in RPC 8.4. It is conduct that is 3 prejudicial to the administration of justice.
4 Period.

5 JUDGE BROWN: There is a line of cases
6 that involve lawyers who start criticizing the Court 7 and the process as being biased, unfair, ridiculous, 8 et cetera, and have wound up with some discipline as 9 a result. That goes beyond merely a slant on the 10 events.

11 MR. HAYDEN: Wouldn't the lawyers
12 response be that I assume a trial judge is not going 13 to read press accounts of the testimony during the 14 course of a trial just the way a jury is instructed 15 not to read press accounts of the testimony during 16 the course of a trial, and, therefore, in my 17 opinion, there would be no substantial likelihood of 18 interference because, presumably, the judge wouldn't 19 be reading it?

20 JUDGE BROWN: Actually, it doesn't make 21 any difference if the judge reads it or not because 22 the judge can see a lot of inadmissible things. The 23 judge is supposed to be unswayed by any public 24 clamor or fear of criticism. So in that regard, 25 yes, there would be a much lesser likelihood of any

1 interference with the result.

2 JUDGE BARRY: I can't imagine not 3 reading press accounts.

4 JUDGE IRENAS: Show me the judge who 5 doesn't read the press accounts and I'll start the 6 Canonization proceedings immediately.

7 JUDGE BARRY: I don't have that problem
8 because I don't get any press.

9 MR. HAYDEN: Ted, you were in 10 Washington when you tried Espe. I believe 11 Microsoft was right down the hall?

12 MR. WELLS: Yes.

13 MR. HAYDEN: What was done on a daily 14 basis in terms of the lawyers dealing with the 15 testimony?

16 MR. WELLS: Every day at four o'clock
17 Boise, who is the government lawyer, would have a 18 press conference right out front; then the Sullivan 19 and Cromwell lawyers would follow. They had formal 20 press conferences every day in the courtroom the two 21 months I was down there with them. They are still 22 having them. You can see it on TV. They come out 23 at a set time and they talk about the case and who 24 killed who or who didn't get killed.

25 MR. HAYDEN: At one point in time

1 Microsoft's PR firm had a press release trying to 2 explain the meaning of certain tapes which were then 3 later on that day ruled inadmissible by the judge.
4 So they ended up getting in testimony that never got 5 in.

6 From what you can see, Ted, has there 7 been any indication from the trial judge of any 8 displeasure with the lawyers making comments each 9 day about the importance of the testimony?

10 MR. WELLS: To my knowledge, no. The 11 judge is clearly aware that press conferences -- 12 formal press conferences are being held every day on 13 the courthouse steps about that case. And, you 14 know, to my understanding, he hasn't done anything 15 about it. Beyond that, I don't know.

16 MR. HAYDEN: Jim, going to the other 17 side of the coin. What is your view of the 18 professionalism of lawyers in terms of the way 19 lawyers have handled themselves in these 20 high-profile cases, we'll say, in the last ten 21 years?

22 MR. WILLSE: I'm not sure I want to 23 antagonize any lawyers, either.

24 (Laughter.)

25 We don't want this to turn into a love

1 feast, either. So our impression, collectively, is 2 that the level of professionalism in this part of 3 the world on the part of both judges and lawyers is 4 very high. Lawyers who practice in federal court 5 around here know what they're doing.

6 I'd be hard pressed to come up with an 7 example of any serious lapse of professionalism
8 which, I hasten to add, is not to say that we don't 9 have disagreements over matters of procedure from 10 time to time, particularly with judges.

11 We bump into both judges and lawyers in 12 matters of closing hearings and sealing documents, 13 access to juries after a verdict. Occasionally 14 elements of a gag order. None of that is -- no 15 matter how robust the dispute may be, none of that 16 is to suggest that we see a lack of professionalism.
17 We had them in the past and I expect we'll have them 18 in the future.

19 MR. HAYDEN: Ray, how about your 20 experience looking at the point of view of being a 21 commentator as opposed to a trial lawyer?

22 MR. BROWN: I think in terms of, from 23 the point of view the craft -- that the lawyers 24 don't get very high grades.

25 First of all, it's been my experience

1 most lawyers haven't a clue about 3.6 or whatever 2 the equivalent rule is in the jurisdiction.

3 And so the education process, even for 4 those who have had courses in ethics, or whatever it 5 happens to be called in that particular curriculum, 6 the numbers of lawyers who talk to the media without 7 any apparent understanding of the ethical 8 implications of what they're saying are legion 9 across the country.

10 This is not just a case -- a situation
11 restricted to high-profile cases. If you start 12 practicing criminal law today in a major 13 metropolitan area or urbanized state like New 14 Jersey, the odds are before your career is over, at 15 least, you're going to get a call from the 16 Star-Ledger on the Atlantic City Press or some media 17 outlet about some case you're involved in. So every 18 lawyer has to make these judgments. By and large, 19 first of all, there is this thing that is not 20 relevant to anybody in this room called ego.

21 The temptation when the microphone is 22 in front of your face and there's a camera there and 23 somebody is suggesting what you have to say is 24 important is tremendous and the number of lawyers 25 who fail to make the connection between the

1 tremendous advantage to come from being seen -- I 2 can remember times when my picture appeared in the 3 paper and somebody would stop me on the street and 4 say, "What do you think about what I said?"

5 I haven't a clue about what I said. I 6 remembered my picture was in the picture. The 7 advertising advantage to the lawyer who gets an 8 unpaid media appearance is tremendous. It requires 9 a consciousness of self and of the rules of ethics 10 to understand that it's the client's interest that 11 comes first. And the number of lawyers who are 12 insensitive to that, not understanding, that are 13 tremendous in number.

14 Then on top of that there is the 15 question of skill. In those instances where you can 16 justify in the client's interest saying something to 17 the press, there is the question of mastering this 18 problem, of saying it in a succinct way.

19 For example, ten years ago one could 20 argue that a cigar was just a cigar. Post Monica, 21 one word has a whole different meaning in the 22 lexicon of Americans.

23 So the skill of using the right words
24 at the right time and using only economical language 25 so that what you say is all they have the choice

1 of -- there are a whole range of things you need to 2 learn in order to do.

3 By and large, I would say that, A,
4 lawyers get bad grades across the country for, A,
5 being oblivious to the ethical nuances. Most 6 haven't a clue about what Gentilli meant or what the 7 '94 amendments meant in terms of your ability to 8 fight back.

9 For criminal defense lawyers not to 10 really understand there is another level in many 11 other places you can think about is also 12 irresponsible.

13 So, by and large, I don't think we know 14 the rules and I think lawyers are not trained to 15 handle the media. So in those few instances where 16 it is appropriate, except for a very small 17 percentage of lawyers around the country, lawyers 18 handle the media poorly in terms of the interest of 19 their client and the interest of the profession.

20 MR. HAYDEN: Judge Brown.

21 JUDGE BROWN: It seems to me the extent
22 that the lawyers don't understand the RPCs, judges 23 have an educational responsibility to compel them to 24 do so.

25 One way to do that is to impose a gag

1 order which just simply tracks the rules and 2 requires not only the attorneys but the parties and 3 investigators to comply or -- instead of facing the 4 possibility of some professional misconduct
5 investigation down the road -- face immediate 6 contempt. That is one way to bring the rules as 7 they exist right to the front of the person's 8 attention. Of course, under Shepherd that is what 9 the judge should be doing.

10 JUDGE BARRY: I think you would order
11 them to comply with Rule 3.6 so they would have to 12 find Rule 3.6. And then if they violate Rule 3.6, 13 you could hold them in contempt of your order.

14 I would be very reluctant to hold them
15 in contempt during the trial, though. I would wait 16 until after the trial.

17 But, of course, then on the expected 18 ineffective assistance of counsel habeas, there will 19 be an ineffective assistance of counsel "because my 20 attorney's conduct chilled his representation 21 because the judge was after him or her" or whatever.
22 But I would order them to comply with Rule 3.6
23 because you can take swift and immediate action 24 without a gag order.

25 MR. BROWN: Joe, I hate to disagree

1 with the judges on the panel. It does seem to me
2 that there are a reason why there are relatively few 3 disciplinary actions or other actions taken by 4 judges. That is because there are few areas of law 5 that are murkier than what 3.6 permits. For 6 example, the very language in our the rule is the 7 language that the court found in the Nevada case was 8 vague and not --

9 JUDGE BROWN: Precisely one of my 10 points.

11 MR. BROWN: So how do you enforce?

12 This is not an area where there are 13 bright lines. That's one of the complications. If 14 you don't know 3.6, maybe you're better off.
15 Because once you got into it, there are so many 16 nuances and that is very complicated.

17 MR. HAYDEN: Judge.

18 JUDGE IRENAS: I have a slightly
19 different aspect than the other two judges. I think 20 most lawyers have at least a sense of a proper 21 ethical approach. They understand, I think, in a 22 sense what they're not supposed to do.

23 My observation is that most lawyers -- 24 I include myself -- in the past are totally inept at 25 dealing with the press. From a technical point of 1 view, in more cases than not reaction when the press

2 calls is to say nothing when, in fact, it well may 3 be that you should say something. Something you 4 could say that would be both ethical within 3.6 and 5 maybe even helpful to your client in a particular 6 situation.

7 And I have found less problem with 8 unethical lawyers running out to the courthouse
9 steps and making outrageous statements than lawyers
10 just plain not knowing how to deal with the press 11 and being afraid of the press.

12 I bet you there are tens of thousands 13 of lawyers in New Jersey; they get a call from the 14 press and their reaction is I can't talk about it.

15 MR. HAYDEN: John, let's try to 16 confrontize this a little bit.

17 JUDGE IRENAS: Confrontize?

18 MR. HAYDEN: Confrontize, yes. Harden.
19 Firm up. Focus it.

20 MR. BROWN: What were you saying about 21 the prior conversation?

22 MR. HAYDEN: Let's assume that you have 23 had a prominent client who was sued in a 24 high-profile case or indicted in a criminal case and 25 there has been a massive amount of publicity about

1 the filing of the Complaint or the filing of the 2 Indictment.

3 John, what do you think you can do
4 responding on behalf of the client in that high 5 profile case whether it be going to the arraignment, 6 filing the Answer or just holding a press conference
7 to get out your side of the story?

8 MR. KELLY: I think the response would 9 have to be comparable to the initial exposure on the 10 other side that was given your client in the case, 11 in the first place.

12 I agree with Ray. The judge is 13 basically dealing with the media is really an art 14 form in itself. You learn certain things on the 15 record, off the record, not for attribution, 16 attribution, who you can trust in terms of the 17 media. But I think what you really have to keep in 18 mind is, first of all, your right to respond has to 19 be responsive to what was put out by the other side.

20 You also have to keep in mind not your 21 own interest as an attorney but your client's 22 interest. Any time you're dealing with the media, 23 the safest thing for an attorney to keep in mind is, 24 one, you shouldn't fire the first shot; you should 25 only be responding. And, secondly, your response

1 should be crafted to be in your client's best
2 interest and not your own. If you sort of inch 3 along that way, get your feet wet, learn how to deal 4 with the media and keep your client's best interest
5 at heart, I think you'll be pretty safe.

6 MR. HAYDEN: Faith, as a government
7 prosecutor, what limitations does the United States
8 Attorney have in terms of the press?

9 MS. HOCHBERG: We are governed by the 10 provisions of the Justice Department policy which 11 is, for the most part, codified in either the U.S.
12 Attorney's Manual or the Code of Federal 13 Regulations. So that there are very specified 14 points of time when we speak and rules that we 15 follow and we don't say anything beyond that no 16 matter how much and how persistent various press 17 colleagues are.

18 They may not know the rules that bind
19 us, but we are supposed to. We try to live by them.
20 We have the same constraints. We are not to say 21 anything that could influence or hurt an upcoming or 22 pending trial. Then there are carveouts of the 23 nature of kinds of things we can say. We tend to 24 speak only at defined intervals when the matter is 25 newsworthy and when it's permitted under Justice

1 Department rules. That is either at the time of an 2 indictment or a plea, be it a plea to an Information
3 or if it's a pre-indictment plea, at the time of a 4 plea, at the close of a trial when it is over, we 5 can speak, if we want to, and then at sentencing.
6 Those are the defined intervals when we do say 7 something and when it is permissible to say 8 something.

9 MR. HAYDEN: Ted, you represent a 10 public company in a high-profile case which is 11 publicly traded. Are there any complications from 12 the point of view of a defense lawyer when there has 13 been a sensational allegation which potentially 14 could have very adverse economic impact upon your 15 client in terms of how you would choose to respond?

16 MR. WELLS: Well, the attorney in that 17 situation has to respond very carefully because the 18 SEC, for example, has brought actions alleging that 19 public comments by attorneys with respect to 20 publicly-traded companies, if they are later found 21 to be false, can constitute grounds for SEC action.

22 Because if you go out and make a
23 statement to the effect it did not happen and let's 24 say the stock moves and it turns out that you knew 25 or should have known that it did happen and you're a

1 representative of the company, you actually expose
2 yourself and the company to false representation 3 charges.

4 But, basically, my view has been, and I
5 say this from the perspective of a criminal defense 6 lawyer as opposed to complex high-profile civil 7 litigation, that the criminal defendant in a 8 high-profile case as a general rule cannot win the 9 press game; that the best course of action, if you 10 can persuade your client, which is sometimes very 11 tricky, especially if your client is a public 12 official -- the best course of action is to keep 13 quiet. Because no matter how you spin the story, 14 the first paragraph will lead so-and-so has been 15 indicated and your spin may be somewhere in the 16 third paragraph.

17 But all you will do is just give 18 another opportunity for there to be a press article 19 about your client.

20 Ray and I, when we did the Secretary of 21 Labor Donovan case -- they hired a PR firm. They 22 must have spent half a million dollars. Easily.

23 MR. HAYDEN: And what did you earn?

24 MR. WELLS: We wanted the money, too.

25 We used to go home. We would ride every day to 1 court for about a year. We used to talk in the car 2 in the morning about how we had to corral these 3 press people because they were like a whole other 4 front that you couldn't control and they wanted to 5 justify the half million dollars. So they're out

6 there making statements. It never did us any good, 7 because as I said, their spin was always in 8 paragraph three. Paragraph one was Ray Donovan and 9 the other Schiavone defendants had been indicted.

10 I'm of the school, really, if you can 11 do it, keep your mouth shut, stay low. If you get 12 an acquittal, you'll be okay. But at the same time, 13 to the extent the prosecutors start to play the game
14 and start to leak, be it ala Ken Starr or somebody 15 else, you have to show that you will retaliate and 16 not just sit there and be the subject of an 17 organized leak campaign.

18 JUDGE BARRY: What you always have to 19 worry about is a sequestered jury, too. If the 20 press gets too hot and heavy, that is lurking out
21 there.

22 MR. WELLS: Sequestered juries are 23 convicting juries.

24 JUDGE BARRY: That's right. Most 25 defense attorneys do not want a sequestered jury.

1 MR. HAYDEN: Before we get to gag
2 orders, let's talk about closure. Let's assume that 3 in a multiple-defendant case you're right in the 4 middle of jury selection and one of the defendants 5 decides to plead guilty during jury selection in a 6 way which at least in the county where the case is 7 being tried is quite the stir, and the defense 8 lawyer, the prosecutor and all of the attorneys for 9 the co-defendants want the plea to take place in a 10 sealed proceeding at least until after the jury 11 selection is over.

12 Faith, is it that easy for everybody to 13 agree to do it and for it to be done?

14 MS. HOCHBERG: Agreements are a 15 wonderful thing in the law. It doesn't happen too 16 often where we're concerned. But, unfortunately, in 17 this case agreement alone is not enough. We have, 18 and the courts have carved out as well, a very 19 strong policy that gets phrased more strongly than 20 almost everything I've seen in C.F.R.

21 Government attorneys have a general
22 overriding affirmative duty to oppose and not to 23 agree to closure, and then it lists some exceptions.
24 Now there is an exception. If failure to close the 25 proceedings will result in a denial of a right of 1 any person to a fair trial -- certainly, that can be 2 argued -- then it is up to the Court to decide 3 whether the standards are met for closing the 4 courtroom.

5 It is not enough for the defendant who 6 has the Sixth Amendment right to a public trial to 7 say, "I'll waive my Sixth Amendment right." There 8 is also a qualified First Amendment right to the 9 press to have notice of the possibility of closure
10 and a right to be heard in some fashion.

11 MR. HAYDEN: Judge Irenas, have you
12 ever dealt with such a problem?

13 JUDGE IRENAS: I have. I might add, a 14 particular -- a lot of people don't know about it -- 15 a particular CFR is 28 CFR 50.96. Not only is the 16 government basically told to oppose it, you need the 17 express authorization of a Deputy Attorney General
18 or Associate Attorney General before you can consent
19 to it. Not only are they supposed to oppose it in a 20 strong statement against it, but you need somebody 21 in Washington to approve it.

22 I had just that situation in a case
23 which the pleas of guilty were four years ago. I
24 still haven't sentenced the person. But the pleas 25 were -- they wanted the pleas to be closed.

1 What we did was I found this regulation
2 and we implemented it. We had a hearing. Made a
3 finding that it should be closed. I won't say why, 4 but there was a reason for it that was consistent 5 with these rules. But I filed a notice with the 6 Clerk's office which, in effect, said I'm sealing
7 something that put the newspapers on notice, I said 8 they could move before me, which they did, to try to 9 undo it.

10 I also provided that everything would 11 be unsealed -- every 30 days we would relook at it 12 to be sure that it shouldn't be unsealed, which is 13 also in the C.F.R. You are supposed to unseal as 14 soon as you possibly can. We put the press on 15 notice and for a while every 30 days had a hearing 16 on whether to release it or not.

17 MR. HAYDEN: What kind of notice is 18 given to the press? Are they told much about the 19 underlying subject matter? Are they just saying 20 there is going to be papers filed in connection with 21 a sealed proceeding? How much information are they 22 given?

23 JUDGE IRENAS: Well, in my particular
24 case, they knew the identity of the defendants. It 25 wasn't a case where we had unknown defendants. They

1 knew who the defendants were. They knew it was a 2 guilty plea. What they didn't know was the reason 3 for the closure.

4 JUDGE BARRY: In the situation you
5 described, Joe, where you're trying to get through 6 jury election assuming the jury selection can be 7 done in a day. One can hypothesize that the plea 8 can be taken at 8:30 in the morning or 7:30 at 9 night. Not when nobody is around but the Court.

10 JUDGE IRENAS: I once did that. I
11 changed the courtroom. I was being chased by a 12 Philadelphia Inquirer reporter who wanted something 13 the party didn't want. We just held the hearing in 14 another courtroom. She was wandering around the 15 courthouse. She didn't know where we were. It was 16 all over by the time she figured out where we were, 17 but it was open.

18 (Laughter.)

19 MR. HAYDEN: Jim, one of your reporters
20 receives a tip as to what happened in the closed 21 proceeding. How much information do you need to 22 responsibly report upon what supposedly took place 23 in the sealed proceeding?

24 MR. WILLSE: Let me back it up a step.
25 If, in fact, there is a desire on one or more of the 1 parties to close a proceeding and if, in fact, the 2 press is given ample notice with enough detail to 3 understand what the proceeding is, then that is 4 fine.

5 If in practice that does not happen or 6 if in practice it turns into an Easter egg hunt 7 where the proceeding is held at 7:30 at night or we 8 have to wander from courtroom to courtroom, it seems 9 to me to defy the whole purpose of having an ample 10 opportunity for the press to discuss a legitimate 11 issue.

12 I would like to think that is not 13 really the view of very many judges; that in order 14 to get the business done, we ought to blow it by the 15 courthouse reporter.

16 I would make the same point,
17 incidentally, about sealing of documents. Our view 18 is, without taking any position on any particular 19 effort to close the hearing or seal a document, all 20 we ask is that we know about it and that we have the 21 opportunity, if we choose, or other members of the 22 press choose, to raise an objection.

23 I understand from what Faith says that 24 is the attitude of the U.S. Attorney's office and 25 that's fine. All we want is a shot to talk about

1 it.

2 To your question. If I understand it
3 correctly, the proceeding has happened. We weren't 4 there?

5 MR. HAYDEN: But you were aware it
6 happened.

7 MR. WILLSE: We were aware it happened
8 either because it happened and we found out about it 9 later or we tried to have it open and failed.

10 What are we going to report about it?
11 I don't know what the level of information we need 12 is to write a story. That is the sort of judgment
13 we go through virtually every day. At some point 14 there is a critical mass of information where you 15 feel you do know and you can write it responsibly, 16 which is to say you're not getting the feed from 17 just one side to the exclusion of the other which, 18 by definition, imbalances the story. That is vaguer 19 than I'd like it to be. But I don't know how to be 20 more succinct.

21 MS. HOCHBERG: You're saying if someone 22 leaked a document you knew to be sealed to you that 23 you would go ahead and run it?

24 MR. WILLSE: We would consider running
25 it.

1 MS. HOCHBERG: That's the issue that I
2 have. If we are expected to behave responsibly, the 3 courts and my office and others, shouldn't you also 4 have that same burden?

5 MR. WILLSE: I would submit that we 6 would act completely responsibly and we would --

7 MS. HOCHBERG: And still consider 8 running it?

9 MR. WILLSE: -- and absolutely
10 considering running it.

11 MR. BROWN: Joe, you and I have talked 12 a few times about paranoia in other contexts. But 13 for about 25 years, whenever I've selected a jury as 14 a defense lawyer, I've always had judges saying, 15 "Don't worry about the press and the fact that the 16 lady in the veneer is knitting a rope for your 17 client. I'm going to pick a fair jury out of this 18 group of citizens."

19 And then I went to a panel like this 20 for the American Judges Association two months ago 21 and the judges there wanted to jail reporters for 22 reporting leaks from the Starr grand jury on the 23 ground it will prejudice trials of anybody indicted 24 by any of those grand juries.

25 It is hard to reconcile those questions

1 because I think one of the areas where perhaps there
2 is more willingness to look at the Emperor is really 3 naked is talking about when you can pick a fair jury 4 and when not and have that a part of the mix in 5 terms of what needs to be sealed or considered 6 sealed.

7 MR. HAYDEN: I want to hear from Judge
8 Brown. Then I want to talk about gag orders.

9 JUDGE BROWN: I have a kind of quick
10 question, probably, for Jim. In view of the diverse 11 nature of the media, what is effective notice to the 12 press or the media of closure of a proceeding?

13 MR. WILLSE: Enough time to respond to 14 it.

15 JUDGE BROWN: To whom? Under what 16 means?

17 MR. WILLSE: There are a couple of ways 18 it could happen. If the issue presents itself in 19 the course of a trial, a jury selection on a 20 Tuesday -- if a hearing on that subject is docketed 21 for the next day and it is made known in some 22 general way in the Clerk's office so we know about 23 it or even if a judge is so inclined -- you know who 24 covers the Court -- say to Bob Rudolph, "We're going 25 to have -- we have this issue before us. Based on

1 past practice, we know this is of interest to the 2 press who may want an opportunity to be heard on 3 it."

4 There's nothing any more complicated
5 than that.

6 Similarly, documents that want to be 7 sealed may be a little trickier because you can't 8 define the documents to such a degree that sealing 9 them is pointless. But if there is some way to 10 describe them generically, docket that for the 11 following day, we can respond very quickly. Even if 12 it's in the morning and we need to go in to court in 13 the afternoon, we can do that. We just need enough 14 time to catch our breath, think it through and make 15 a presentation.

16 MS. HOCHBERG: There is a court
17 decision, I think, on that. It said to put a docket
18 entry. You don't have to chase down --

19 JUDGE BROWN: My question is,
20 practically, is that sufficient, I think Jim is 21 saying?

22 MR. WILLSE: We can move pretty fast.

23 MR. HAYDEN: John, you're in a 24 high-profile case. The first time there's been 25 charges and counter attacks back and forth. You

1 show up in Court. The trial judge says that he or 2 she wants to impose the following gag order:

3 All attorneys, parties, and/or agents
4 are prohibited from making any extrajudicial
5 statements about the merits of the case from today 6 forward.

7 And the judge wants to incorporate that 8 gag order into an order and wants the clients there, 9 -- their agents there in court -- would you consent
10 to such an order?

11 MR. KELLY: Sure. In having been 12 gagged before, I would say it is a pleasure to be 13 gagged when you're getting ready to try the case.

14 For example, in pretrial discovery with 15 the Simpson case there was no gag order and we 16 literally had to litigate that case 24 hours a day.
17 We would go through eight hours of deposition. We'd 18 sit there. Figure out what our spin was going to be 19 before we went out to a press conference. We'd take 20 care of all the press conference issues for an hour 21 or two and then we'd hit the evening news waves.

22 We were required to do it. It was 23 responsive because you had the defendants in this 24 case and his cronies and mouthpieces out there doing 25 the same thing. It just had to be litigated around

1 the clock.

2 When you're approaching the trial or 3 you really have to concentrate, you can really take 4 a lot of pressure off your mind and focus your 5 concentration on being gagged. It's probably the 6 optimum way to try a case, all things being equal,
7 and it's been imposed early on and there's been no
8 undue prejudice to either side. It is a treat.

9 MR. HAYDEN: Judge Barry, do you think 10 that such a gag order is Constitutional?

11 JUDGE BARRY: My first reaction is if 12 the other side felt as Jim does, you've got no
13 issue. So who cares if it's Constitutional?
14 Everybody agrees that we want this gag order.
15 Perhaps somewhat broader than it need be, but gag 16 orders of that nature have been upheld.

17 MR. HAYDEN: Some of the cases we've 18 talked about. Certainly, gag orders against the 19 attorneys on the basis of the RPCs -- and we talked 20 about a recent Fourth Circuit case -- have been 21 upheld.

22 Ray, how about the provision in the gag
23 order pertaining to the client and/or the client's 24 agents? Do you think that -- assuming you do not 25 have a willing defense attorney who feels for

1 strategic reasons or for reasons of personal 2 convenience -- and I agree with John. There are 3 times when it makes your load a lot lighter. Let's 4 assume you have a client or you do not have somebody 5 willing to agree. Is it Constitutional to go that 6 far in your opinion?

7 MR. BROWN: Well, some courts have said
8 so.

9 I should point out that your partner
10 assigned me to a pro bono case in Delaware. I 11 mentioned you and your partner because we lost and I 12 wanted to share the mortar. Involving a lawyer in 13 the Amy Grossberg case in Delaware who faced a 14 possible death sentence.

15 Prosecutors had made extensive -- the 16 judge had entered an order incorporating Delaware's 17 3.6, which is very much like our 3.6.
18 Notwithstanding that the Attorney General had made 19 comments that were clearly conclusory on Geraldo and 20 elsewhere about the fact that the evidence warranted 21 the death sentence and there was likely to be a 22 conviction.

23 The -- a second lawyer coming into the 24 case was aware that his clients were going to go on 25 Barbara Walters' program. Barbara Walters

1 interviewed the defendant and the State filed a 2 motion to have the lawyer removed.

3 So the sanction to the client for 4 having violated a 3.6 order, which included the 5 client and agents, was that she lost her lawyer of 6 choice in a capital case. That was affirmed by the 7 Delaware Supreme Court.

8 MR. HAYDEN: Jim, can you envision any 9 instance where the press would oppose such a gag 10 order and appeal it?

11 MR. WILLSE: I don't think so. We 12 understand the motivation of the gag order. I don't 13 know that we share the sense of relief that comes to 14 the parties. As long as it is not gagging us, even 15 after the fact, I don't know that we would object 16 strenuously.

17 I want to, if I can, just mention one
18 other thing. It is wonderful to be sitting here 19 among judges and lawyers and listening in on this.
20 I feel like I'm listening to something privileged I 21 wouldn't ordinarily hear. The discussion of how to 22 deal with the press is like how do you deal with 23 Lyme disease?

24 (Laughter)

25 MR. WILLSE: I don't want to leave the

1 idea that certainly us, the responsible and virtuous 2 Star-Ledger, is just this gaping maw that will take 3 any information that comes from any source at any 4 point in a proceeding, sealed or unsealed, spun, 5 unspun, and put it in the paper. We would like to 6 think that we have some ability to judge the merit
7 of the information and the motivation with which it 8 is offered.

9 There is plenty of stuff that we are 10 told by opposing lawyers by parties to a proceeding, 11 that never does make it into the paper. We can tell 12 the difference between good information and bad 13 information and we tend particularly -- we didn't 14 talk about this so much. We tend particularly to 15 look askance at certain utterances from opposing 16 counsel on the eve of a trial.

17 We might be interested in some material 18 two months ahead of time. Now the trial is going to 19 begin in a couple of days. I'd like to think that 20 we're more inclined to impose kind of a rhetorical 21 no-fly zone when you start to get close. We have no 22 interest in prejudicing or tilting the proceedings, 23 either.

24 JUDGE BARRY: You know what's a
25 problem? When you have a bloody crime scene photos

1 that have been admitted into evidence and the press 2 wants copies of them, the television media, to put 3 them on the Six O'clock News. That is a problem.
4 What do you do?

5 MR. WILLSE: I go to work for a
6 newspaper, for one thing. It is a problem. From a 7 judge's point of view, I don't know what you do 8 about it because there it is in open court, 9 particularly if there has been a camera in the 10 court. Now the pictures have been either entered 11 into evidence or the camera took a picture of it, I 12 don't know how you keep it out.

13 MR. HAYDEN: We want to wrap it up
14 because we have our very distinguished speaker. I'm 15 going to ask everybody one more question. Give me a 16 yes or no answer.

17 MR. HAYDEN: In 47 states in our Union
18 television is permitted in the courtroom in state 19 court proceedings. Television as of now is not 20 permitted in the courtroom in criminal trials in 21 Federal District Court. And, Judge Barry --

22 JUDGE BROWN: Or civil.

23 MR. HAYDEN: Or civil -- do you believe 24 that television should be permitted for trials in 25 the District Court?

1 JUDGE BARRY: No.

2 MR. HAYDEN: Judge Brown?

3 JUDGE BROWN: No.

4 MR. HAYDEN: Judge Irenas?

5 JUDGE IRENAS: No.

6 MR. HAYDEN: John Kelly?

7 MR. KELLY: Yes.

8 MR. HAYDEN: Faith Hochberg?

9 MS. HOCHBERG: No in District Court.

10 Yes on appeals. Starting in the U.S. Supreme Court.

11 MR. HAYDEN: Ray Brown?

12 MR. BROWN: I have an obvious conflict
13 on whether they should. I'll simply say it doesn't 14 matter what we say here. Sooner or later they will.

15 MR. HAYDEN: Jim?

16 MR. WILLSE: Yes.

17 MR. HAYDEN: The no's win but not 18 enough to appeal.

19 I also would like to extend regrets
20 from Michael Critchley. As everybody knows, Mike is 21 on this panel. He is one of the finest lawyers in 22 this state. His case is a high-profile lawyer. He 23 is now in Superior Court in Monmouth County on a 24 high-profile case. Because it was an emergency, he 25 had no choice but to be in court. He sends his

1 regrets.

2 I would ask everybody to go downstairs
3 for our luncheon and quickly as possible because we 4 have a world class speaker and we'd like to go to 5 lunch.

1 MR. HIMMEL: If everyone would be 2 seated, we'll start with the luncheon portion of the 3 program.

4 (Pause.)

5 I have several announcements to make.
6 But before I do that, I think all the panels did an 7 outstanding job and we should give them a round of 8 applause.

9 (Applause.)

10 MR. HIMMEL: For those of you who 11 noticed it when you signed it and for those of you 12 who did not, there was a handout at registration 13 about the John J. Gibbons Inn of Court which focuses 14 on federal practice.

15 And for those of you who are young here
16 or young at heart, you might want to consider 17 applying for membership to the Inns of Court. I 18 believe they're accepting applications starting 19 immediately for a two-year program starting in 20 September.

21 Number two, for those of you who did
22 not have an opportunity to get a federal I.D. card 23 or an Association of the Federal Bar I.D. card, we 24 are going to be continuing with the process after 25 lunch. For those of you who are here, who are not

1 members of the Association of the Federal Bar, you
2 may wish to join and then get an I.D. card.

3 Finally, the next major event of the 4 Association of the Federal Bar is the William J.
5 Brennan Dinner and it will be held on June 10th. I'm 6 pleased to advise all of you that this year, as in 7 past years, there will be co-recipients of the 8 award. And this year it will be Senior Circuit
9 Court Judge Robert Cowan and Senior District Court 10 Judge Joseph Rodriguez and I invite all of you to 11 attend on June 10th.

12 We now move on to the Pro Bono Award 13 presentation. About a year ago Judge Bassler was 14 asked to chair a New Jersey steering committee for 15 the Third Circuit Task Force on counsel for indigent 16 litigants in civil cases. And as a result of his 17 extraordinary effort, a plan was recently accepted
18 by the Board of Judges. Who else would be better 19 than Judge Bassler to make the presentation?

20 Judge Bassler, please.

21 (Applause.)

22 JUDGE BASSLER: This is the first 23 opportunity I've had to publicly express my 24 appreciation to the members of the steering 25 committee, too many to name this afternoon, for the 1 extraordinary work that they gave in putting 2 together approximately 14 recommendations to the 3 Board of Judges in an effort to improve the success

4 and effectiveness of our Pro Bono Program.

5 The recommendation that I want to 6 mention right now is the Board's determination that 7 there should be an annual award for extraordinary 8 service to the Pro Bono Program given annually.
9 This is the first such award. It is really my 10 pleasure and privilege to give this award to the 11 firm of Gibbons, Del Deo, Dolan, Griffinger & 12 Vecchione. There isn't a judge on the Court who 13 hasn't at one time or another reached out to that 14 firm for assistance in a typically troublesome case 15 and when that firm hasn't responded very generously 16 to the Court's request.

17 Now, who from the firm?

18 MR. LUSTBERG: I get to do this.

19 JUDGE BASSLER: Here he is.

20 (Applause.)

21 JUDGE BASSLER: We actually have two 22 placques. One to go to the firm, itself. You will 23 notice it could be hung in a prominent place. And,
24 in addition, we're going to have a permanent honor 25 roll at the Bar Center in New Brunswick and the 1 first firm on that, of course, will be yours.

2 Mr. Lustberg.

3 MR. LUSTBERG: I'm not going to make a
4 long speech. I want to thank the Court for this 5 very nice award. Of course, I was on the committee
6 that recommended that we have this award. So it's 7 not all that surprising. You know, there is a lot 8 of benefits, obviously, to providing pro bono 9 service to the Court. Some of them may be 10 anticipated and some of them, maybe, are not so 11 anticipated. The anticipated one is that you curry 12 favor with the judges and you get all this good 13 experience for your associates. The unanticipated 14 ones come about with the cases we get appointed 15 to -- the troublesome cases that Judge Bassler 16 mentioned.

17 For example, when Judge Debevoise
18 appointed us some years ago to a case where we 19 fought for the right to adequate medical treatment 20 for sex offenders; that got me uninvited to 21 partnership meetings at my firm, which I viewed as a 22 huge benefit.

23 When Judge Politan appointed us to 24 represent a sex offender, and challenging Megan's 25 Law, that got me uninvited to a number of social

1 events in Chatham where I live. I view that as a 2 benefit as well.

3 When Judge Wolin and Judge Pisano 4 appointed us to a case where we fought for the 5 rights of, once again, sex offenders to get 6 pornography in the prisons, so far successfully, 7 that actually got my mother to stop calling me,
8 which I viewed as the greatest benefit of all.

9 (Laughter.)

10 Seriously, though, it has been our 11 honor as a firm and I know I speak for all of the 12 partners, associates, paralegals and even 13 secretaries at Gibbons, Del Deo to provide service 14 to what we really view as the most superb court in 15 the world. And it has also been our privilege and 16 pleasure to provide service to people who really do 17 need it.

18 One of the purposes of the 19 recommendations that were enacted now by the -- 20 accepted now by the Board of Judges is to encourage 21 other firms to do likewise.

22 I guess I'd like to add my personal
23 encouragement. It is a terrific experience. You 24 get good cutting-edge cases involving important 25 constitutional issues. It has been enormously

1 rewarding for us and we are grateful not only for 2 this award but for the opportunity.

3 Thank you very much.

4 (Applause.)

5 MR. HIMMEL: At this time I'd like to 6 have a former President of this Association, Bill 7 Brennan, come up and introduce our luncheon speaker.

8 Bill.

9 MR. BRENNAN: Thank you, Mike.

10 I'd like to divide this pleasant task 11 into two parts. In the first I'll stick to the 12 script and in the second I'd like to ad lib a bit.
13 The script is the CV of a remarkable newspaperman.
14 The subject of my remarks is, of course, Anthony 15 Lewis, a two-time winner of the Pulitzer Prize and a 16 long-time major player in the pages of the New York 17 Times.

18 Tony was born in 1927, a graduate of 19 Harvard College. He went to work, to the extent 20 that the Times offers any lowly positions, in a 21 lonely position at The Times as a deskman in its 22 Sunday Department. From that Tony doubtless learned 23 the meaning of the word "ennui." In 1952 he went to 24 the now defunct but then vibrant tabloid of the 25 Washington Daily News.

1 And it was with the Washington Daily
2 News that he acquired the first of the two 3 Pulitzers. The event that resulted in that award 4 was his series -- this was in the height of the 5 McCarthy era -- directed to an employee of the 6 Department of the Navy who was fired from his job 7 without ever being told why. Commonplace, perhaps, 8 in that era. Not so much so now. Thanks in large 9 part to the work that Tony did in crafting this 10 series of articles.

11 Following his award of the Pulitzer, he 12 went back to the New York Times. Now in its 13 Washington Bureau. In 1956 and 1957 he was a Neiman 14 Fellow at the Harvard Law School. Following which 15 he came back to The Times and reported on legal 16 affairs for The Times, including the work done by 17 the Supreme Court. And it was in that context that 18 Harvey -- that Tony and my father first became 19 acquainted. And out of that acquaintance an 20 enduring relationship formed and that will be the 21 subject of my ad lib.

22 For his coverage of the Supreme Court
23 Tony received his second Pulitzer. This time in 24 1963. Thereafter he became Chief of The Times 25 London Bureau in 1964. And it was from London that

1 he first began to write the column that appears even 2 today in The Times. Tony is the author of three 3 books. "Gideon's Trumpet," about a landmark case
4 which Arnold, Fortas & Porter handled, indeed, while 5 I was there as a pro bono matter and building upon 6 the last ceremony talking about cutting-edge pro 7 bono work.

8 Thereafter he wrote a book "Portrait of 9 a Decade" about the great changes in American race 10 relations and following that "Make No Law: The 11 Sullivan Case and the First Amendment," about which 12 I'd like to speak briefly in a moment.

13 To the extent that Boston would allow 14 itself to have a power couple, Tony is one half of 15 such a couple. His wife, a lovely woman, Margie 16 Marshall, I first met when she was counsel to 17 Harvard University. She's now an Associate Justice 18 on the Supreme Judicial Court of the Commonwealth of 19 Massachusetts.

20 Now I'd like to get into the ad lib.
21 It was a year ago that we celebrated my father in a 22 program which all those here, who were privileged to 23 participate in it, will never forget. Tony Lewis 24 could have been and should have been on that 25 program. It is only because I was asleep at the 1 switch at the time that I neglected to think of him 2 even though he should have been in the forefront of 3 my thoughts. The friendship between him and my 4 father informed by a mutual respect and affection

5 was a wonderous thing to see.

6 One of my jobs following his death was 7 to go through my father's correspondence before 8 sending it over to the Library of Congress.

9 In 1979 a remarkable series of letters
10 were exchanged between Tony and my father. In that 11 year he was -- he, my father, was unfairly attacked 12 because he was part of small real estate operation
13 which also had Judge Basilon and Judge Skelly Wright 14 as its members.

15 The Washington press, most unfairly,
16 attacked him for that and there was one nationally 17 respected newsman who came to my father's defense 18 and that was Tony.

19 I don't want to suggest to you that 20 because of that a friendship, already deep and 21 enduring, became even more deep and enduring. But 22 over the years that is just what the relationship 23 was. And, perhaps, the best illustration of that is 24 the following:

25 At the end of each term my father, or

1 one of his clerks under my father's supervision, 2 would dictate his impressions of that term's work of 3 the Court. These were called the Case Histories.
4 There are two sets of those histories in existence.
5 One is in the Library of Congress where access to it 6 is severely restricted. The other is in the 7 personal possession of Tony Lewis. And it was out 8 of that position -- out of that possession, I should 9 say, that "Make No Law: The Sullivan Case and The 10 First Amendment," drew much of its inspiration.
11 Because many of the documents in Tony's safekeeping 12 informed much of that book. And the reason why my 13 father gave his papers to Tony is because he knew 14 that he would treat them as responsively and 15 productively as he has.

16 So it is against this background that I
17 am privileged to introduce this modest man, Tony 18 Lewis, who has so very little to be modest about.

19 (Applause.)

20 MR. LEWIS: Bill, I think I should,
21 maybe, quit while I'm ahead. That was wonderful.
22 Hardly a day goes by that I don't think about your 23 father and miss him and it is very touching for me 24 to hear what you just had to say.

25 Judges, ladies and gentlemen, thank you

1 for asking me here today. A conference like this 2 means a lot to me because I am a romantic about law 3 and lawyers. I can say that literally for the 4 reason that Bill has already told you because I'm 5 married to one. But I mean it in the sense of my 6 profound respect for what you all have done, and do, 7 to give our country its extraordinary combination of 8 liberty and order.

9 I want to speak today about what has 10 happened to our basic government institutions under 11 the pressure of recent events; Monica Lewinsky, 12 impeachment, and all that. I am not going to talk 13 about Monica's dress or the gifts under Betty 14 Curry's bed. We have had enough of the details, 15 gory and humdrum. But the larger implications of 16 what happened in the 13 months beginning in January 17 1998 cannot -- should not -- be so easily dismissed.
18 As Willie Loman's wife first said on stage 50 years 19 ago, and is saying again now in New York, "Attention 20 must be paid."

21 When the Senate impeachment trial
22 ended, there was a good deal of self-congratulation.
23 "The system worked," we were told. The Constitution 24 had triumphed again. But I put it to you that 25 there is no occasion for smugness.

1 First of all, "the system" that 2 operated over those 13 months, ending in the 3 impeachment and trial of President Clinton, was 4 different in significant respects from what the 5 Framers of the Constitution thought they had 6 created.

7 Professor Stephen Griffin of Tulane Law
8 School pointed out in a thoughtful paper that the 9 men who met in Philadelphia in 1787 did not have in 10 mind elected Senators or political parties. They 11 knew nothing of opinion polls. They could not have 12 imagined a prosecutor holding the President up to 13 obloquy in hundreds of pages of a "referral" to the 14 House of Representatives.

15 Most important, they would have no idea 16 that the President would have responsibilities for 17 economic and social policies affecting all the 18 people of a vast country, and that his power, even 19 his legitimacy, would depend in good part on his 20 direct relationship with those people. The Framers
21 were in a different political world: One where a 22 small, white, propertied, male elite made all the 23 political decisions. And where the new Federal 24 Government they were creating would have limited 25 functions, leaving most of the business of governing

1 to the states. To say that is not to question the 2 Framers' genius. Far from it, it is only to begin 3 looking realistically at the assumption that the 4 system they designed has just triumphantly proved 5 itself.

6 Put The Framers aside for the moment
7 and think about what actually just happened. Would 8 a rational system to remove a President who 9 threatened the state have invoked the ultimate 10 weapon of impeachment on grounds so feeble that 11 despite great partisan pressure they failed to win a 12 majority in the Senate, much less the necessary 13 two-thirds vote? Would a wise system have put the 14 presidency, and us, through a year of trauma over an 15 illicit sexual relationship?

16 That is what it was about. Sex.
17 Senator Bumpers was right when he quoted H.L.
18 Menken, "When they tell you something is not about 19 money, it's about money."

20 When they told us in this case that it 21 was not about sex, it was about sex. Yes, the 22 charges brought by the Independent Counsel, Kenneth 23 Starr, and then by the House of Representatives, 24 were perjury and obstruction of justice. But 25 President Clinton dissembled and evaded as he did to 1 fend off questions about sex.

2 Mr. Starr laid a perjury trap for him,
3 bringing the President before a grand jury as no 4 other Federal prosecutorial target would likely have 5 been brought. Justice Department policy, I hope in 6 the presence of the U.S. Attorney and so many judges
7 that I have it right, but I believe the Justice
8 Department policy calls on prosecutors to respect 9 the Fifth Amendment guarantee against forced 10 self-incrimination and, therefore, to avoid calling 11 targets before grand juries. Mr. Starr ignored that 12 policy. And the president rightly or wrongly -- I 13 think wrongly -- decided that refusing to appear 14 would be too harmful to him politically. That was 15 what Mr. Starr had counted on. The trap was sprung.

16 Ladies and gentlemen, put yourselves
17 back, say, 30 years. If you had predicted then that 18 the President of the United States could be dragged 19 into court by a civil plaintiff claiming that he had 20 committed a sexual tort years before he took 21 office -- if you had predicted that he could be 22 brought before a grand jury by a Federal prosecutor, 23 that his White House lawyers and Secret Service
24 guards could be forced to disclose his confidences, 25 I think you would have taken off to the funny

1 farm. But that is where we are. The President has 2 lost much of his expectation of privacy. Decades
3 ago they used to speak of a President's life as a 4 splendid misery.

5 If it was a misery then, what would we 6 call it now? Which of us would want a life in which 7 we could confide in virtually no one, in which 8 private behavior was subject to criminal 9 investigation? And none of us has responsibilities 10 remotely like those of the President. I wondered, 11 incidentally, whether the judges who held that the 12 lawyer-client privilege does not apply to lawyers 13 paid by the government would be happy if that theory
14 were applied to pierce their confidential 15 relationship with their law clerks -- who also are 16 paid by the government.

17 How did it happen? You may have 18 noticed that just now I said no one 30 years ago
19 could have expected such developments. I chose that 20 figure deliberately. For the change began 25 years
21 ago, when the Supreme Court held that a special 22 prosecutor, Leon Jaworski, could require President
23 Nixon to hand over tapes recorded in the oval office 24 for use in the prosecution of his former assistants.

25 Most Americans applauded that Supreme

1 Court decision. I did. And it is easy to 2 understand why, even putting aside one's feelings
3 about the Watergate affair. In the turmoil of that 4 time, when Americans became aware that at a minimum
5 their President had been involved in dirty business, 6 it was reassuring to have the Supreme Court speak in 7 terms of what the law required. Law over politics;
8 it sounded right. But another law has taken over;
9 the law of unintended consequences.

10 The breadth of the Supreme Court's 11 opinion invited other breaches of Presidential 12 confidence. Breaches of the protective wall to 13 which the doctrine of the Separation of Powers 14 entitles the Presidency. For those interested, I 15 recommend a recent article in the New Republic by 16 Professor Akhil Reed Amar of Yale Law School. It is 17 entitled, "The Unimperial Presidency."

18 The point being that we used to worry 19 about the imperial presidency but, starting with the 20 Nixon tapes case, Presidential power has been eaten 21 away.

22 The next step was the passage by 23 Congress of the Independent Counsel Act which 24 converted what had been an ad hoc response to the 25 crimes of Watergate -- the appointment of Archibald

1 Cox and then others as Special Prosecutors into a 2 permanent institution. The statute vested the 3 appointment of such a counsel in a special court of 4 three Federal appellate judges. On its face that 5 seemed to violate the notion of the Separation of 6 Powers, since prosecutors are meant to be part of 7 the Executive Branch. But the Supreme Court upheld 8 the statutes constitutionality, emphasizing that it 9 allowed the Attorney General to remove an 10 Independent Counsel if he or she went a stray. That 11 provision, as you know, has proved more theoretical 12 than real, for political reasons that do not need to 13 be spelled out. And just now the provision has 14 become even more theoretical. When Attorney General 15 Reno told Mr. Starr that she was planning to 16 investigate possible wrongdoing on the part of his 17 office, he objected that she had no power to do 18 so -- that she had to appoint another independent 19 lawyer to investigate him.

20 The claim, in other words, was that she 21 could remove him for wrongdoing but could not 22 inquire to see whether he had done anything wrong.
23 At that point an outside political organization went 24 to the special three-judge court that appointed Mr.
25 Starr and complained about the Attorney General's

1 plans. So far as I can see, that organization had 2 no standing whatever. And under the statute the 3 Court had no power to review the Attorney General's 4 action. Nevertheless, the judges directed her and 5 Mr. Starr to file briefs on the matter. That is how 6 far the Independent Counsel Act has taken judges 7 from their Constitutional duty of deciding cases and 8 controversies.

9 When the Supreme Court upheld the Act,
10 Justice Scalia, dissenting, commenting as follows
11 upon the method of appointment by a panel of judges.
12 Quote. "What if they are politically partisan, as 13 judges have been known to be, and select a 14 prosecutor antagonistic to the Administration ...?" 15 Close quote. But, as you know, Justice Scalia was 16 alone in his foresight. The majority's decision was 17 another step in the weakening of the Presidency, in 18 ways that became evident when Mr. Starr began his 19 crusade against President.

20 But before I return to Mr. Starr, I
21 must mention the third Supreme Court decision that 22 has made the President newly vulnerable. That was, 23 of course, the decision in the Paula Jones case.
24 Again, it won nearly universal approval at the time 25 from me, among others. The President cannot be

1 above the law, we were told -- as if that solved the 2 problem. The courts said the burden on President of 3 dealing with Ms. Jones' lawsuit should not distract 4 him significantly from his duties.

5 The burden just about turned out to be 6 the undoing of his Presidency. Ms. Jones was not 7 able to show that she suffered any damage as an 8 Arkansas state employee after the claimed sexual 9 advance by President Clinton except that she did not 10 receive flowers on Secretary's Day or so Judge Susan 11 Weber Wright held. But in the discovery process, 12 the judge allowed her lawyers -- wrongly Professor 13 Amar says -- to ask President about any sexual 14 relationships he had with other government
15 employees. If the relationships were consensual, it 16 is hard to see how the subject could be material to 17 Ms. Jones' claim of harassment, but the question was 18 allowed.

19 And the rest as they say, is history.
20 Enter Mr. Starr. His deputy prosecutors confronted 21 Monica Lewinsky in the Ritz Carlton Hotel in 22 Pentagon City and made sure she would not telephone 23 the lawyer who had helped her prepare an affidavit
24 denying "sexual relations" with the President.
25 Unadvised of the Prosecutors' threats to put

1 Lewinsky in prison for 27 years if she did not admit 2 to perjury and other crimes and get immunity for 3 cooperating, her lawyer went ahead and filed the 4 affidavit that afternoon. If he had been advised, 5 he told me, he would of course not have filed. And 6 I would not be here talking to you about this 7 subject.

8 Mr. Starr's assistants questioned the 9 President in the White House with the testimony 10 going to the grand jury by closed-circuit
11 television. They said it would have to be 12 videotaped because one grand juror was absent. I do 13 not have to tell you that grand jurors are often 14 absent, one or more. Of course, the real idea was 15 to have a videotape that could be played to the 16 country. Thus, the President's misbehavior and 17 misrepresentation would be brought home to the 18 public. But contrary to those expectations, the 19 public that watched Mr. Clinton's testimony imagined
20 how they would feel -- the people, I should say.
21 Imagine how they would feel as targets of those 22 disembodied prosecutorial voices, probing into the 23 most painfully intimate matters -- and they 24 sympathized with the President. Most, in any event.

25 Then came Mr. Starr's "referral,"

1 weaving together at the length of a Russian novel
2 asserting facts that Mr. Starr said suggested
3 removing President Clinton from office. It was a 4 gratuitously pornographic document and tendentious
5 in the way it presented evidence. I say "evidence," 6 but it was not evidence in the sense used in our 7 criminal courts. Something asserted by one side and 8 then tested by cross-examination. None of the Starr
9 witnesses was ever cross-examined. The referral
10 used carefully-selected portions of testimony before 11 a grand jury, where the witness had no lawyer to 12 protect him or her and could be harried
13 indefinitely. Nor did the House of Representatives 14 or its Judicial Committee hear witnesses or subject 15 them to cross-examination. The majority simply took 16 the Starr referral as gospel.

17 In our -- think about, maybe taken a 18 bit long going through history you are familiar with 19 to get to the point, but think about where that 20 process leaves the Presidency and the Constitutional 21 balance of powers. The Framers designed impeachment 22 as a political process, carried out by the popular 23 branch of Congress, the House. But in this case the 24 entire investigation was carried out by a 25 prosecutor. One unrestrained by the usual

1 requirements of accountability and with no limits on 2 his resources. Upon deciding that the 3 Clinton-Lewinsky relationship raised the possibility 4 of impeachment, Mr. Starr could have referred the 5 matter to the House for investigation, if it chose.
6 The Constitutional order, in my judgment, says he 7 should have done that but he did not.

8 In Professor Griffin's words, in the 9 last year, "A new Constitutional order has been 10 rapidly created before our eyes ... In this new 11 order, a President can be impeached for conduct 12 arising out of a private lawsuit on evidence 13 developed by a grand jury that is not subject to 14 further examination by the House of Representatives.
15 The system has not worked. It has been changed.
16 And we are all worse off because of it." End quote.

17 Underneath all this, I think, there is 18 an important phenomenon of contemporary American 19 society. Hostility to politics. There are reasons 20 for the lower state of politicians these days.
21 Among them a campaign finance system that allows 22 elections to be bought and sold. But whatever the 23 reasons, our low opinion of politics and politicians 24 has led us increasingly to look for ways to decide 25 important issues not by political debate but by the

1 supposedly more lofty processes of the law. That 2 spirit underlies the Independent Counsel Act. It
3 also led to the law that has set up an Inspector 4 General in every government department, operating 5 like a little FBI and harassing honorable officials
6 like Richard Holbrooke. Justice Scalia, dissenting
7 in the Independent Counsel case, said "Nothing is so 8 politically defective as the Act to charge that 9 one's opponent and his associates are not merely 10 wrong-headed, naive, ineffective, but in all 11 probability 'crooks.'" "

12 The temptation to make such charges has 13 been greatly increased by the existence of the 14 Independent Counsel Act. Instead of using the 15 democratic political process to change policies and 16 officials we do not like, we demand that an 17 independent counsel investigate them.

18 The result of a statute that has judges
19 pick a prosecutor vested with extraordinary power -- 20 and in my judgment pace the Supreme Court -- does so 21 in gross violation of separation of powers -- was to 22 turn a tawdry sexual impropriety into a damaging 23 prosecutorial crusade.

24 Monica Lewinsky, in her book, objects
25 in detail about her treatment by Mr. Starr's agents

1 and I think she was right. In the middle of a 2 Starr-crossed year I wrote that a respected
3 professional prosecutor offered Linda Tripp had 4 offered her tapes would have told her to go away and 5 I gave as an example of such a prosecutor Robert 6 Morgenthau, the District Attorney of New York
7 County.

8 The next day my telephone rang and a 9 voice said, "Mr. Morgenthau would like to speak to 10 you."

11 Oh, dear, I thought, I got it wrong.
12 But Mr. Morgenthau got on the phone and said, "You 13 were right."

14 More recently, William Weld, a former 15 United States Attorney and Governor of Massachusetts 16 said, "The asserted perjury and obstruction of 17 justice that gripped the country for a year," quote, 18 "would not ordinarily be prosecuted." Close quote.

19 Whatever one thinks of Bill Clinton's 20 conduct -- and I think ill of it -- it should never 21 have become the subject of an impeachment and Senate
22 trial. The perversion of our Constitutional system 23 lowered the bar on attempts to remove the President 24 from office.

25 Those who managed the impeachment

1 effectively said that any illegality, however 2 trivial, however private, may be defined as a "high 3 crime and misdemeanor."

4 We congratulated ourselves on the 5 wisdom of the American people in rejecting the call 6 to remove the President from office. It was the 7 people, we were told, who understood the 8 Constitution and frustrated the partisan attempt to 9 misuse the impeachment provision.

10 But were we really so wise? Suppose
11 the economy had not been booming. Suppose Kenneth 12 Starr and his assistants had not been so ugly in 13 their methods. Suppose the House Managers had not 14 seemed so vengeful, so intolerant. Would the 15 opinion polls then have opposed the President's 16 removal? Would we have escaped the disaster of 17 overturning an election on such improper grounds.

18 There is another reason to doubt that the 19 public response to the attack on President Clinton
20 reflected only a profound Constitutional 21 understanding or only that. That is the skill of 22 Bill Clinton.

23 Professor Ronald Dworkin put it that 24 his "dogged persistence and charm surpassed
25 expectations yet again. We were saved from a

1 constitutional disaster not by the Framers'
2 prescience but by Clinton's political skills, and by 3 his and our sheer good luck."

4 Yes, I think we were lucky. But we 5 cannot count on luck saving us from future assaults
6 on Presidents.

7 "We need," Professor Dworkin said, a
8 "consensus that impeaching a President on the kinds 9 of grounds the House cited is a crime against the 10 Constitution. Otherwise, we cannot be confident 11 that a President less popular or less successful 12 than Clinton would not be impeached by partisan 13 zealots."

14 There is something else on our agenda
15 for recovery from this episode. That is to restore 16 the essential elements of presidential privacy that 17 was stripped away in Mr. Starr's investigation. It 18 seems to me grotesque that the President of the 19 United States should have to retain a private lawyer 20 in order to have a confidential consultation about, 21 say, the suicide of a government employee. Congress 22 should act to restore the assurance of confidence to 23 discussions between the President and White House
24 counsel. It should legislate a testimonial
25 privilege for the President's Secret Service guards

1 except as to their observation of actual crimes.

2 And it should overrule the Supreme Court's decision 3 in the Paula Jones case, providing that any civil 4 action against the President be postponed until 5 after he leaves office.

6 One other institution needs to think -- 7 rethink its role in our system. Can you guess which 8 one I have in mind? I think you guessed it. The 9 press. Rather than risk passing judgment myself on 10 our profession, I want to quote a great friend of 11 the press, Floyd Abrams, the First Amendment lawyer.
12 "I believe the media," Mr. Abrams said recently, 13 have "been complicit, often instrumental, in leading 14 to the impeachment. I refer not to one story or 15 another or one error or another. My point is more 16 basic. It relates to the definition of news, 17 itself.

18 Once the press, all of it, treated the 19 question of whether the President had sex with 20 Monica Lewinsky and then sought to cover it up as an 21 extraordinarily serious topic, a topic truly worthy 22 of repeated coverage, the dye was cast. The risk of 23 impeachment immediately became the realer once the 24 definition of the story was chosen. The press made 25 sort of a collective judgment that the topic was not

1 only newsworthy but earth shaking. I fault the 2 press for a collective lack of judgment and sense of 3 proportion."

4 Well, ladies and gentlemen, I'm afraid
5 this has been a rather grim luncheon speech. But 6 that was what was on my mind. I want to end by 7 saying this. The Framers, as I have been saying, 8 did not give us the process that has just done such 9 damage to the Presidency. What they did give us was 10 an extraordinary institutional stability, a 11 stability that has allowed this country to grow and 12 change in ways unimaginable by the Framers while 13 preserving the promises of democracy and law. That 14 gift is what we should treasure now, rededicating 15 ourselves to the institutions that have kept us 16 stable and free.

17 Thank you.

18 (Applause.)

19 MR. HIMMEL: Tony, I want to thank you
20 for coming and taking off from your busy schedule.
21 I want you to know, in appreciation of that, the 22 Association of the Federal Bar has made a
23 contribution in your honor to an organization I know 24 is very close to your heart and of which you are a 25 director, the Brennan Center at New York University

1 School of Law.

2 (Applause.)

3 MR. HIMMEL: Thank you all for coming.

4 Lunch is now served.
